CYNHTIA D NOVEL

CYNHTIA D NOVEL

GYNTHIA3/3

WITH THE

Tragical Account

OFTHE

Unfortunate Loves

OF

ALMERIN and DESDEMONA:

Being a

NOVEL.

ILLUSTRATED

With Variety of the Chances of FORTUNE; Moraliz'd with many useful Observations, drawn from thence, whereby the Reader may reap both Pleasure and Profit.

Done by an English HAND.

The Eleventh Edition, Corrected.

LONDON:

Printed for R. Ware, at the Sun and Bible on Ludgate-Hill; C. Hitch, at the Red-Lion in Paternoster-Row, and J. Hodges, at the Looking-Glass on London Bridge.

Printed for James Hodges, at the Looking-glass on London-bridge.

Full and Compleat History of the Lives. Robberies, and Murders of all the most notorious Highwaymen that have been in England, Scotland France and Ireland, from the Reign of William the Conqueror to this present Time, beginning with Thomas Dun, Robin Hood and Little John, Sir John Falltaff, Capt. Hind, the Golden Farmer, Nevisson, Whitney, and above 100 more. Also, giving a more full Account than any yet publish'd, of the Robberies committed by Benjamin Child, John Hawkins, and George Sympson, who were all Three executed for robbing the Briftol Mail: Concluding with the Life and Robberies of the Famous Carrouch in France, and also the Robberies and remarkable Actions of John Molhoni and James Carrick lately executed for robbing William Young, Efq; in his Chair. The Whole being faithfully collected out of the best Histories, Records, Trials, Ordinaries Accounts and Manuferipts by J. W.

Printed for R. Ware, at the Sun and Bible on Ludgate-Hill.

EMBLEMS for the Entertainment and Improvement of Youth, containing hieroglyphical and enigmatical Devices relating to all Parts and Stations of Life; together with Explanations and Proverbs in French, Spanish, Italian and Latin, alluding to them, and translated into English: The whole curiously engraved on 62 Copper Plates. Price 2s. 6d.

RESILENTE RESILENTE RESILENTE PROPERTIES PRO

TO THE

READER.

Courteous READER,

e

15 d

g -

d

n-

y-

all

la-

an

ito

62

F Study be the Soul of Understanding, would you not be Studious ? Since Knowledge only is the School mistress of Sublime and Illustrious Spirits, and makes them transcend the Vulgar as far as the Sun excells the Moon in Brightness; (for what difference is between a Man pre- Mar. Ant. fuming to be Man, not being learned and a Beaft) what certain Joy, true Honour or great Profit, can a Man challenge unto himfelf, and not look for fudden Viciflitudes to alter them into a worse State than they were before, thro' the inconstancy of our Human Condition? Where then shall we feek for these great and rare Properties; to find that which of it felf will be unto us both Profitable and Pleafant altogether, and that not for a Moment, but for ever? Truly in Knowledge, which First is able to mollify Man's Nature, being before Savage and Wild, and to make it capable of Reason. Secondly, Frameth and Settleth his Judgment, that he may not pais the Course of his Life in all Tranquillity of Mind to the Profit of many. Lastly, CauAnacharsis. ses him to die in Honour, with certain Life and Happiness. Contrariwise, saith the Philosopher, Idleness is a Thing like a cankering Rustiness to the Body, and to the Soul; and as an eating Consumption, it wasteth and bringeth to naught both Virtue and Strength; it is the Grave of Living Men; it is a Thing wherein Life dieth, and thereby the Soul of Man is Twice buried in him, once in his Body, and next in his Sloth.

I examined and discerned the Difference to be vast betwixt Vice and Virtue, between Learning and Ignorance, between Sloth and Activeness, between a wise Man and a Fool, and then I approved of that wise Saying of the Aristippus, Famous Aristippus, (Better it is to a Beggar than a R 10 H Man without Learning) I confidered the whole Life of man, that he continues but a small Time here, and the Moiety of this Moment he lets pass in fottish sleep, which is Death's Coufin German, fo that he dies living; and when Death takes him hence his Memory dies with him, and goes into Oblivion. I contemplated the Milery of worldly Men, that like Ants, toil and labour for wealth and in the midft of their Hopes to go down to the Grave; and go to give an Account for the gathering and using the same, and that perhaps to their perpetual Dampation; whilst in the mean time. other Companions in the World do live merry and pleafant upon that he hath gotten, little remembring or less caring from him that perhaps lies burning in unquenchable Fire for those Riches unrighteously heaped, and less unto them. Nor was the last vious Man forgotten to my Memory who leaves no Stratagem unattent t d, no crafty Design unacted, nor to Wickedness, let it be never so so horrid, undone to accomplish his Lust, which, alas, vanishes in a Moment, and leaves an After Repentance.

This caused Antistbenes, be- Antistbenes.

ing asked of a Man that was best to learn. he returned him this Answer, To unlearn the Evil thou hast learned; that is, to return back from the Highway to Hell to the School of Virtue; that Man travels a long Way from home that never look: back; and he is in a lost Condition that never thinks of amending.

These Considerations agreeing with my vacant Hours gave being to this succeeding History; in the Study of which I found the Treasures of aSoul endowed with Reason, which is a Happiness wherein all Human Pelicity confifteth and which never breeds Vexation of Spirit. What shall I say? In the Continuance of which I found a pleafing Solitary Companion for the tedious Winter Night? Was I in Love, here I found Mistress to Court, with a clearer Satisfaction and Delight than those Passions that vanish in the Fruition. Was I in Adversity, here I found a Comforter. Was I in Prosperity, the Knowledge of what I was, made my love folid, and so kept me from being Aragant. Was I Fortunate then I considered the Vicissitudes of Fortune, And when I feem'd overwhelm'd in the Gulph of Despair, I could ride securely by the Anchor of Hope, and expect a Calm. Thus from the Offspring of my idle Hours I purchased to my felf both Pleasure and profit, and that not for a Moment, but to Perpetuity. I speak not this in Oftentation, that exceeds the Meanest, but the happy Change the Imitation of Virtue has produced; of which I hope the Reader will participate with me.

A

The Discourse is Love, a Passion of all other most lovely and agreeable to the Fancy; so inviting, and fweetly Charming, that Reason it self cannot fland in Competition against it; yet so necessary that a Wise Man once said, To see Love banished our Streets, is as to fee the Horizon without a Sun, or the Year without a Spring. This Labyrinth, wherein Wife Men lose themselves, and Fools recover their Wits; where Wisdom runs a Wool gathering, and Passion guides the Helm, I present unto youasa mirrour that will demonstrate the Difference between Love and Lust; wherein Virtue is illustrated in the Person of Cynthia and Orfamus, and Vice figned to the Life in the Person of Almerin, or [still worse and worse] this is a more full Story, where the Walks are the gloomy Shades of Death, the Discourse is dismal, the Narration lamentable, the Adventures Tragical and the Examples Woeful. Wherein are prefented the Snares of Love, the Credulity of Innocency, the Heart of Affection, the Fire of Lust, the Fruits of Rashness, and the Reward of Perjury; and nay this you shall hear related for Profit as well as Pleasure, that by others Harm we may learn to avoid our own, wifely to shelter ourselves from the threatning Storms, and fo grow cautious to shun those Rocks where others have suffered Shipwreck. Let Beauteous Maidens here learn to prize their Honour, and fet a high Esteem on their Chaftity, by the woeful Example of Fair Defdemona; and let all Fathers avoid Anger & Paffion by the Example of Artimedorus, who occasioned by his Folly the Sanguine Part of this mournful Story.

Story. Let all Virgins beware how to bestow their Love by the Example of Poor Artemefia; & let all Parents here behold the Miseries of enforced Marriage in the Example of Almerin. The whole History being a sweet Summary of bitter Calamities proceeding only from the fame Caufe. Thus we may read with Delight the Difatters of others, making their Misfortunes our Advantage, for there is a kind of Voluptuousness in the Rehearfal of past Miseries, a Pleasure even in Misery itself, Experience doth daily teach us. When we confider how the Sea of our Misfortunes doth ebb and flow with the various Shape of Hope and Despair; how impetuous the Storms, and how wonderful are the Viciflitudes and Changes of this, Nature from thence proceeding. Thus from this Relation may be sucked fome honey as well as Poy fon, For if from the greatest Venome may be extracted an Antidote to expel the Operation and Force of the strongest Poyson, then from this Bulk of Misfortunes, judiciously and feriously confidered, the ingenious Reader may gather good, and no harm, by the Reading this lamentable Story.

ft

d

a

-

d

2

I

e

n

d

C

i-

e

it

d

0

n

Tully tells us, that in Time of Old, People were dull and barbarous, rude and froward, unsensible and uncapable of any Tully. ferious Study: To this End and Purpose many of our Antients have written curious Stories, many of which are extant to reclaim the Mind of the Multitude, which are apt and prone enough to hear Folly: Witness Diagesness the Cynick, who when he had any grave Matters to relate, he would call the People to hear him, which when they regarded not, he would sing merrily, to which when many resort-

AS

ed.

ed, he would fay, To hear Foolishness ye run apace, but to hear any Weighty Matter ye fcarce put forth your Foot. From this Cause only Fables and Romances took their first Original: Wife Men endeavouring to make the Vulgar grow Wife by their own Folly, drawing them with that Bait they most dearly affected. for what is a Fable but a filent Representation of a more weighty Matter: And what is History but a lively Essence, describing the pleafing Transports of the Soul? By this Craft they make Vice to affilt Virtue, and Satan to be foiled in his own Weapons. Thus by presenting the shadow, they cause them to embrace the substance, so have I seen a careful Mother first nurse her Child with a Teat, then with a Spoon, and after with stronger Meat: Did not the best of Men speak in Parables? and what is a Parable but a Thing sympathising and agreeing with a matter of greater Value, helping to explain it more lively to the Capacity of the Auditors, to whom it is related. Indeed, what are the Heavens and the Earth drawn and presented unto the Eye by Art, a secret History of Similitude, declaring the Majesty and Power of our Great Creator? Like as when we fee a finall Beam of the Sun, we apprehend in Reafon it has its Original from a greater; fuch indeed has been, and should be still, the Intention of all those that write Parables, Fables, or Romantick History, to feafon them with Morals and Observations, fo applying them to a Vertuous End, that as little Rivulets they may wast the Reader e'er he be aware unto the River of Virtue, and Ocean of all Felicity.

Such I did intend this fucceeding History, in which there is no Eminent Example but is illufirated and flored with fruitful Ob ervation, for the Profits and Behoof of the Reader, firiking the Iron whillt it is hot, so making use of the Advantage whilft the Examples is fresh in Memory : For I believe nothing can demonstrate or present any Thing so lively as when we have the speaking Example evident before our Eyes. Here is Hittory curiously woven and intermixed with things Moral and Divine, the Pleasure and the Profit is bound up in one entire Nofegay, and it feems impossible to fever the one without the Ruin of the other; so have I seen a careful Physician mix the bitter Potion with Honey, for the better Digestion of his Patient. Zeno being demanded how a Man might become happy, answer'd If he drew near unto, and haunted the Dead; meaning thereby, if he read Histories, and endeavoured to learn their good Instructions; and here thou hast no small Variety of Presidents of modern Authors gathered by my Industry, and replanted as I found Opportunity to place them.

The Total Sum, or Moral of the whole History is foon cast up, by examining it with that Saying of the Wife Man. That a just Man fall seven times and Prov. 24. 16.

riseth again, but the Wicked falls into Mischief: That is, the Upright Man is subject to many Dangers but God delivereth him out of his Distress, making his very Missortunes an Addition to his Joys. Oh, what Heavenly Comfort (say, an Antient Father) do they inwardly feel, who are delighted with the Remembrance of Sufferings past, with the Fruition of

Joy,

Joys present, and with the Expectation of Felicities to come! This Happinels is represented in the History of Cynthia and Orfamus. Wicked

Men are figured in the Person

2. Timothy 3. of Almerin for Evil Men and Verse 12. Deceivers shall wax worse and worse, their Portion shall be cursed in the Earth; and as a Verse 18, 19. Fall on a Pavement is very sudden, so shall the Fall of the Wicked come hastily; because God strikes not presently, the Wicked are fet to do Evil, but although Heaven be flow in Punishment, yet when they strike they strike fure, for God spares the Wicked not in Mercy, but in Justice. Oh how suddenly do they confume, perish, and come to a fearful End? Yea, even like a Dream when one awaketh, fo shall their Memory vanish. Compare Times past with your daily Experience, & prove them both by this History, and you will find it no new Thing, that the Vertuous Man is made Shot-free from the strongest Batteries of Fortune by the Affiftance he receives from above, while the Vicious Persons fall from bad to worse. Heaven above perfues him as an Enemy, and Hell below is ready to receive him, so that he is miserable here, and wretched to Eternity in the World to come. Examine the whole History by this Touchstone, & you cannot miscarry; let this Moral be the North pole you will fail by and you cannot receive a Wreck; feafon it with fuchSalt. and you may read and not receive a Surfeit; for History thus us'd is Water turned into Wine. If these Considerations on the Lives of Just & Wicked Men, do but perswade and oblige thee to examine thy own, I have the fruition of my Wishes, and Recompence of my Time. Cynthia

Cynthia, (the Title of the Book) a Name of Diana, or the Moon taken from Cynthus, a Hill in Delos, where fan-Cynthia. cies of Poets fay she was born a Planet, as Methematicks affirm, that takes her

net, as Methematicks affirm, that takes her Circuit in the lowest Orb; that receives what Light she enjoys from a greater; that in her greatest Splendor is not without Spots. This may ferve for a filent Emblem to excuse the Errata of the whole History, which in the Fyes of manymay feem fair; but when an Artist comes to survey it, it will not be found without faults, (fince Nature perfected it, and not Art) many faults are in the Orthography, many Errors o'er passed in the Ingrofing; therefore I excuse myself to save the curious Critick a Labonr, who finds faults in others, yet amends not his own: Yet to the judicious and partial Man I submit myself, who knows how to fcan and pass by Infant faults, What I have writ was for my own Diversion, not Timerous, for to write to fear, is to be fick only to be well again, and that I never had Intention to be.

It is History'd of Alexander the Great, when he laid Siege to any Great City, he set up a Light in the midst of Alexander his Army, to signify unto the Besieged if they submitted themselves before that Light was burnt out they should receive Mercy; but that being once out there was nothing to be expected but sire and Sword. This may be alluded to the Day-light of his Life, which God hath given us to repent in, the Date of which being once at an End, and Death taking hold upon us there is nothing to be expected but a certain looking for of Judgment.

And

And so, to the Almighty I leave thee, to thy Guardian Angel I commit thee, wishing you may be happy in all things but Unhappiness, that you may be Poor in the World, but Rich in Heaven; that you may not live long, but well; so guiding our Lives here that we may never be afraid of Death, but embrace him as being one that transports us from this Vale of Woe, to the Heaven of Eternal Blis; unto which happy Place bring us all, LORD JESUS. Amen.

iner and when and the single after every in the every in the control of the felt to five the control of the con od ot y il bom savroscotto como galed per ella especiale de como anola biscotto de como cual besone el especiale como como alla la significación como como del

The principle of the Cary No.

经验证证证证证 yu in eee

CYNTHIA.

ORTH from a Defert and unfrequented Wood in the East Parts of Albion, abutting to the Sea, issued out a Woman, and feated herself upon a Carpet of Sweet Flowers, embroidered by the Hand of Nature: She refembled Diana, the Beautiful Huntress of the Woods; or more Fair, if possible: One would have taken her for a Celeftial Deity if the succeeding Viciffitudes of Fortune had not strongly persuaded fhe was a moral Beauty. Indeed the Purity of her Complexion feemed to excel the new-fallen Snow, but Sorrow had gathered the Carnation off her Cheeks. All the Features of her Face had so near a Kindred, and formed to so rare a Proportion, that she seemed Nature's Master-piece; or rather sympathized something of that Divinity whose Name she bore. From her Eyes darted a Luftre, mingled with a Vivacity so penetrating, that it was impossible for the most confident Soul to make a Resistance, This prodigeous Creature, after the had fearched every vacant Place with her Eye, fearing to be over-heard, with a trouble and a Low Voice the began as followeth.

Omy dear, though Absent, Orsamus! To whose Merits I never yet gave any Reward; whose complaints I could never be induced to Pity! When Neptune Shipwreck'd thee upon the Sho e, I little thought thy Presence would beget me such Disquiet; O Duty! O Love! To what extreams do you hurry me? And what Enemies are you to my Reft? The Birds that live in these unfrequented Woods, are happier than I; for they may chuse their Mates, and carol their fweet Pleasures to the Springs; but by the cruel Commands of a Father, I am forced to rieglect the Person I love; and difefteem the Services of one with Disdain, whose Welfare I prize above my Life; who once loft, I would not bid a Welcome to the dearest Good the World can afford me. But alas! The Time draws near that will make a perpetual Divorce. Unfortunate Or samus by thy Absence; miserable Cynthia, by thy folly.

Scarce had these Words took a farewel from her Mouth, when from an adjacent Part of the Wood issued out a Man, rically apparalled, and bent his Steps directly to the Place where she sate. Her Eyes had no sooner sound him out, but with excess of Grief she uttered these Complaints. O cruel Heavens! Do you take a Pleasure in tormenting submitting sunocence, that you conduct this Monster, the Enemy of " my Content, and fatal Disturber of my Quiet, fo fortunately to the Place of my Concealment?

Now farewel my poor Or famus; I shall only stay here amongst the Living to consecrate the

Relicks of a languishing Life to thy Dear · Memory.

By this time the unknown Person came up; and feating himfelf by her Side, he accosted her with this Discourse: Madam, faid be, your Father expects you with Ardency, and is in fearful Apprehensions of the certainty of your Safety. Why, Madam, continued be, at such a time as this do you feek out Solitude, and fo carefully shun the Person that adores you? Why these Clouds, my dear Princess, on 2 ' Joyful Day : Wherefore these Tear too, too precious to be thus lavishly cast away? Why are my promising Joys overcast with such fearful Omens, and my sweetest Hopes vanished? Tell me, O tell me! Joy of my Blifs, what may occasion your Disquiet, that with the Peril of my Life I may procure a Remedy.

This Fair Unknown, was preparing for a Reply, when they were disturbed with a Noise from the Neighbouring Thicket; and casting their Eyes about to understand the Cause of that Surprizal, when behold there rushed out a Man whose unexpecting Appearance was quickly become their Astonishment: His Visage was Pale, and clouded over with Grief, in all the Regards and Lineaments of his Face appeared a natural Fierceness; his whole Composure shewed the Evidence of something so Great and Noble, that spake him to Command others. Born to different the whole World, and think it held none sit to be his Rival.

He set his Face and directed his hasty Steps to the Place where they sate; but his Presence put them both into a Consussion. He no sooner presented himself to their sight, but sixing his Eyes wholly on this Fair Unknown, as the

Load-

Load-Stone of his Will, and Centre of all his Happines, with a Rapture of Joy he suddenly cast himself at her Feet. Omy Divine Princes said he, Beautiful, Cause of all my Missortunes, and cruel Original of ail my Missortunes; and cruel Original of ail my Missortunes! How careful has Fortune been to make me happy, when Intended to sacrifice the Fragments of this wretched Life to your Sest verity! I have yet this Comfort less me in Death, to complain to you of your Injustice.

1

a

]

1

t

All this time a wavering Colour often went and came in her Cheeks, that she became stiff-ned with Astonishment, as if she had been Planet fruck; but at last calling back that Assurance, her sudden Surprizal had sequestered; Gods! Said she, Is this Orsamus himself I see before me? Yes, reply'd be, it is Orsamus, if you have not cast the Memory of so poor a Wretch into Oblivion. This faid, he difembraced himfelf from her Knees, and with a look full of Terror he drew his Sword to pierce his Breft with that fatal Weapon But Cynthia no fooner law that glittering Minister of Death unsheathed, but giving a grievous Shrick she fell into a deadly Swoon; when suddenly casting his Eyes about he faw this first Gallant sitting like one Metamorphofed, or a Statue without Life; and fuddenly calling him to Remembrance, Oh (ery'd be) have I found you, the only Opposer of my Blis? Can you think to go fafely away with that Prize, which is only due to my Services? If you know how to own a Good, maintain the Interest you would challenge in this Divine Creature with your Sword. Saying this, he presented his Sword against his Breast, but he never moved from the Place where where he fate, neither did he endeavour to make any Motion of Defence.

-

6

e-

e

ne

e,

. .

t

Æ-

ar

1

1 ee

if

2

n-

k

13

20 of the fact of the second це

a

al-

rd.

his

ice

J.C

In this Interim of Time, his Friends who had been in quest of him in the most secret Parts of the Wood, hearing a Disturbance, came up unto him, and seeing Cordello in danger, at that Moment they made in, and resued him out of his Hands, when no doubt he had acted the last Catastrophe and Scene of his Life. They all assaulted him at once; but he, without spending a Thought upon the Number, rushed upon'em like Lightning, with a Swistness, and Looks so terrible and dreadful, that he made the forwardest to repent their Rashness. Six lay slain by his Hand; and they had encompassed him about, so that it seemad impossible he could make any long Resistance against such Numbers as surrounded him.

When, lo Fortune provided a Remedy for this Disaster; yet one that seemed worse than this Disease. Behold from an adjoining Creek of the Sea, shaded by a little Hill, issued out about Sixteen Pyrates, led on by their Captain. They came not to affift either Side, bot to make their utmost Advantage of both. No sooner had the Assailants of this Brave Cavalier beheld them coming but they all ran away; only he alone fer himself in a Posture of Defence to preferve the Lady: But over powered by their Numbers, they forc'd him to submit to their Wills ; yet not before he had receiv'd Four Defperate Wounds in the Body; in revenge of which he had flain Four of their best Men belonging to their Vessel. They convey'd Cynthia, with Orfamus on Board the Boat, intending to fatisfy the Death of their Companions with the Author that had occasion'd it. They put off from Shore, and began to prepare for his intended Execution; mean while the Fair Cynthia, whose Spirits were newly returned to execute their proper Function, fat almost dissolved in Tears? beholding these Preparations for Orfamus's Death, fearfully apprehending what the could not as yet know the cause of; going unto him that feemed Commander of the rest, fhe demanded to what use those Weapons, and Preparations of Death were made? He returned Answer, . For that Cavalier, that in her Defence had flain Four of the best Men belonging unto his Ship. Sir, (reply'd Cynthia) that young Man is my Brother; and ye cannot well blame bim for what be did in the Defence of a Dear Sifter : And fure the Course you would take is indirect, fince if you fulfil your Resolutions you can gain nothing by his Death, but by preserving bis Life you may receive a great Ransom.

The sweet Thoughts of Gain, delivered from fo lovely a Creature, set both his Love and Covetouness on the Rack. In sine, the Hope of Gain turned the Current of their Revenge, in Execution of which their Choler abated, and they rested satisfied. But it was not so with their Commander, for the Eyes of his Fair Prisoner had opened themselves a Passage, and darted their resplendant Rays into the Soul of this sierce Pyrate. He found such Charms as it seem'd impossible, and meer Folly, to stand in Opposition against them. Here was a Metamorphose wrought by the Force of Love and Beauty, a Barbarian civilized to a milder Temper: For accosting his fair Prey he composed all that was Fierce and rude in his Looks out.

his

vn-

re-

ed.

for

nat

ng

ft.

ind

ed

)e-

ng

at ell

a ike

101

ng

m nd

pe

e,

d,

fo

113

e,

ul

ns

nd

eve

er'

n-

ks

to

to Respect and Duty. Madam (reply'd he) 'Tis enough that you defire your Brother Should live: Rest satisfied, he shall live only for your Sake ; not fo much for our Interest as for your Content: For we could well have difpenc'd with our Gain to give our Revenge Precedence : But your Defires have put a Period to our Resentment. Thus you reign Triumphant whilst you esteem yourself a Captive. O Madam, continued he, cease those Showers; clear up those bright Stars; Have you any Desires? Give'em a Name, for I find it irrefiftable to give you a Denial. Retire to yonder Catin, which shall be wholly at your Difposal. Your Menial Servan's shall not be more Officious, than these my Men that seem so Barbarous shall be dutiful at your Command. For myfelf I'll pay my Respects as much haste a Zeal as we pay our Devotion to the offended Deities, at such a time only when my Vifits will not incommode your For I am not so much a Pyrate but I know what Civilities ought to be paid to Ladies of your Quality; which, as you are to me, is not mean. Rest firm in the Affurance of my Promise, whils I take care for the speedy Dressing of your Brother's Wounds, and for his Accommodation in the Ship. Saying this he left her with a profound Respect.

Orsamus, who was an Auditor and Spectator of the Discourse that passed betwixt the Pyrate and Cymbia, was transported with Ravishment when he understood that she was his Preserver. Nay, said be, since my Life is not indifferent to my Fair Divinity, I'll live to free her from this Captivity, or perish in the Attempt: Since she seems to have an Esteem for my Life, I'll endeavour to preserve it, for I cannot but prize what she esteems. These Words over-bold, and dangerous to his Life, were over-heard by those that guarded him; but being spoken in the British Tongue, were not understood. By their Captain's Command he was carefully conducted into the Hold, where he had a Lodging assign'd him, and Surgeons sent him that searched his Wounds, which they sound dangerous, but not Mertal: They carefully dres'd them, and left him unto his Rest.

This rude Rabble, that violate all Laws, both Divine and Humane, yet obey'd their Superior with a Dutious Respect: His Commands were a Law not to be examined, or disputed by them, whether just or unjust; but suffilled with all Obedience, and submitting unto without Reprenancy. So it became a Law amongst them (He bimself spake it) so there remained nothing behind but to put it in speedy Execution.

While Things were thus stated, they would have tack'd about again for Shore, to have received their expected Ransom for Orsamus; but there arose a cruel Tempest, which convey'd them many Leagues from thence into the main Ocean. The Pyrate also doubting that there might be some Vessels set in pursuit of him, drew a small Compass forth his Pocket, and according to the Directions of that Compass commanded his Men to steer a contrary Course. The Captain not so sorry for disappointing his Men of their Hopes, because he had an Opportunity to oblige Cynthia with the Stayance of her supposed Brother; as also to Benefit himself in making him the Solicitor of his Love.

Three Days had pass'd fince this last Disaster besel Cynthia; mean time Orsamuswas carefully dress'd, and officiously attended, and Cynthia served with much Caution, the Pyrate never visiting her without Permission. On the Fourth Day he invited her to take a Walk upon the Deck. It was about the Time that Sol lest watery Neptune's Bed, and newly darted his Rays upon the Face of the Water.

his

led

que,

m-

old.

and

ds.

al:

nto

WS.

Su-

nds

ited

lled

out

ngft

ain-

xe-

uld

ave

us ;

on-

the

that

t of

ket.

rfe.

his

ore of

im-

arec

Cynthia according with his Defire; and kindly presenting him her Hand, they went both forth the Cabin. But Oh, what a Mine of B auties did the Tell tale L I G H T Present, which Grief, and that dismal Place had detained from his Eyes; for the Pain and Fear the suffered for Orsamas, by the Assurance of his Safety, was part y vanished away; so that the Beauty they had put to flight was almost returned back again to its usual Lustre, which this Pyrate took some Time to contemplate and admire. The increase of her Beauty augmented his Pasfion; and those Sparks of Love and Pity that lay hid before, began to blaze into a Plame, as by the Sequel will appear: For after she had sweetly complain'd unto him of the detaining of her Feedom, and that according to his Promite, he had not put her Brother to his Ransom, t king a Hint from these Words he began as followeth.

Madam (faid be) would I fet you Free-dom to fale, a Kirgd m were too little to pay the Ransom. If your Brother's Liberty has been deferr'd, perhaps your Interest was the chief Occasion, when in some fort to oblige you I have neglected so great a Gain. For should I accord with you in this one Thing, touching · touching your Freedom, possibly I should di-· vorce my Eyes from the dearest Object for · ever. Madam, I love you, because 'tis impos-· fible to fee you and be infenfible. I have a · Passion for you that nothing can extinguish but Death ; but 'tis legitimate, and may be own'd by you without a Scruple, were your · Condition equal to the Degrees of a Princefs. · My Birth is not ignoble, altho' the Difasters of · my Life have been uncommon; nor because · I feem ruftick, is my Condition fo mean, · fince the King of Norway a few Days fince proffered his Niece to Wife, which upon my Return to Norway, I did intend to ac-· complish; and had certainly effected it, had onot your prodigious Beauty disappointed my Defigns. And for your Liberty, how can you account it a Restraint when your Goaler is become your Slave? Abate but our Separation, and your Desire cannot name another Thing should meet my Refusal. If once I be ' fo happy to attain the Shore of Norway, whither I intend in a few Days to go, I'll spend the Refidue of this wretched Life at your · Feet.' Here he continued filent, leaving Cynthia in amaze at the Discovery of his Passion; yet being obliged to reply, she returned this Answer. 'Sir, your respective Usage could not give me more Satisfaction than your unpleasant Discourse gives me Discontent since you take away the Hopes of my Liberty in denying my Ransom. Never think by Confraint to gain my Affection, nor by detaining my Liberty to make me become kind. Would I accord to your Will, I am at my Brother's Disposal whom you disable in denying him him his Freedom. But never think by fuch rude Ways, to force Love for your Hopes will all fail you, for my Soul is free although my Body be your Prisoner; and you shall find I can die when I cannot love.' Saying this, she left bim and returned to ber Cabbin.

Mean while the Pyrate stood like one transformed: Yet not minding to despair of the first Repulse when he had the Person in his power? fo that recollecting his Spirits, he went immediately to give Or amus a vifit, whose wounds by this time were reasonably well recovered. After Salutations past, he desired him to be his Assistant to his Sister, who protested never to dispose of herself without his Consent; promising him in Recompence to give him his freedom; or if he would accompany him to Norway. he should have ample Revenues to subsist during Life. These offers in civility must be suited with an agreeable answer, altho' his intentions rived far from the Matter. He promised him if he would allow him the freedom to vifit his lifter, he would perform the utmost of his Endeavours to procure his Content; that if his Felicity depended upon his disposal, he would be no Obstruction to defer it, that seeing he had put him to his choice, he had rather go to Norway with his Sifter, than to return without her into his own country. Thus he was fore'd to delude him with Hopes, so to detain him within the Bounds of Reason.

The pyrate was fatisfied at the freedem of his Discourse giving the physicians order, when his Wounds would permit him, to let him free Access to his Sister's chamber, and liberty of conversation, at such times as he best pleased.

B

This

vour cefs. rs of aufe ean. fince pon achad my you er is arather I be whipend our ving affirned ould ynince y in Conning ind. Broying him di-

for

pof-

ve a

ruish

y be

This past he left him unto his Rest; but his Transport was too great to let him mind that necessary Minister of his Health: That which Cynthia had done for him in preserving his Life, by adopting him with that happy Title of Brother, and lastly, not to dispose of herself without his Consent, was a sit Subject to exercise his Thoughts upon. Now her former Rigours were all vanished to his Memory, and he considered her only as his Benefactor, and Original of his Felicity. Oh! (quoth be) in a Rapture to which this charming fair one had reduced him. If so rich a Mine of Treasure be left to my disposal I shall grow too great a Miser, and become too covetous ever to allow a Partner, or admit a Rival to my Happiness. O happy Orsamus in the midst of my Missortunes! O welcome Disasters, that have engaged my A-doration to fo fweet an Object.

He pass'd away his time in such pleasing tranports, ever fancying the Idea of his fairest

Cynthia before his Eyes, that all other thoughts were hush'd in his Silence, and his Contentment seem'd persect in the height of his Satisfaction. Whether the wounds receiv'd Addition from the Temperature and Quietness of his Mind I cannot tell, but in two Days time he found himself in a Capacity to visit his dearest Physician; which being made known unto the Pyrate, the more to oblige Cynthia, he intended to present him unto herself.

Twas about the time that Phabus had clim'd into his mid-day height, and began to drive his Chariot to the western Seas, when Orsamus accompanied him to Cynthia's Cabbin. They found her sitting in the most dismal Part of the

Room,

1

d

a

1a

fo

th

th

N

Room very disconsolate accompanied only with a Mournful Silence. At their first Entrance, the Pirate saluted her in this Manner: Madam said he, since the disconcealing of my Love has begotten your Disquiet, I have courted all Opportunities to dissipate your Resentments: Yet I sear you will not welcome the Happiness, because I bring it. This said with great Respective departed out of the Cabbin.

Scarce had he given an Exit by his Absence, shutting the Door after him, but Orsamus in a Transport cast himself at her Feet so hastily as she had neither time nor power to prevent him. But she unwilling to let him remain in that Condition presented him her Hand, rise Orsamus, said she, this prostrate Action can scarce obtain its Pardon; your presence at this Time is not unwelcome, since it has quitted me of some Fears that possess'd me in your Absence concerning your Welfare, and the Wounds you received in my Desence.

Them Wounds (replied Or (amus) have been less cruel than those I received from your fair Eyes; they would admit of a Cure, but these daily augment without hope of Remedy. Oh my dearest Princess! I die daily, and every Moment begets a new Death. If your Anger has prepared me a Condemnation, I will receive the fatal Doom from your Mouth with a perfect and entire Obedience. Believe it Or-Samus (replied she) you would not obtain that fo easily as your imagination flatters you; neither perhaps has my Severity proceeded from the same Cause as your Opinion has taken it. No, no I have not been insensible of your Love, nor regardless of your Merits, but have pri-B 2 im'd drive amus

They
of the

at

e,

of

elf

er-

he gi-

ed

nd

er,

py

A-

anrest

thts

ent-

atis-

Ad-

Is of

ime

ear-

unto zed them both at their true Value in my Breaft.

Orfamus howing his Head at this Discourse with a profound Respect; Then Madam, (reply'd he) I am utterly loft, as my Fear constructed it: for if my Princess vote me happy I'll bid Defiance to Fortune's Malice; fince she cannot in all her Stock of Misfortunes find one Obstruction to make me miserable. But, Madam, what shall this happy Wretch do, whose Life you have preserved with such Excess of Generolity? What Price shall he pay for the least of those Divine Bounties: By a Fidelity (reply'd Cynthia which I value above my Father's Crown; and by which till Death you may preserve that Affection, whereon you establish your Happiness. If that be the means Treply'd Orfamus) I will be happy to my Tomb, and all the human confideration shall not make me waver one Moment in my inviolable Loyalty; Honour, or what else we esteem most dear or precious shall all submit, as Trophies to my Love: Neither would I welcome a Happiness that comes not from you, or for you. But, Madam (continued be after a [mall Pause) if I may have Licence to ask it, how shall we dispose of our Affairs in this condition, where into Fortune hath blindly brought us? The happy Title of brother you have confer'd on me hath preferv'd my Life, and by your bounty I begin to prize it as its true Value, fo that I can dare the worst Effects of Fate. But for you, my dear Princess, that you should be brought to such Extreams in that which gauls my Heart with unexpressible Grief. My Misfortunes are become my chief felicity, but I am too miserable in in yours: You have raised me to the height of human Happiness, then Gratitude calls that I should purchase your content. Fortune spight of herfelf, shall shortly give you ease, or put a Period to the cause; fince to expect her to be kind is to involve ourselves in greater Dangers. Desparate Wounds must have desperate cures: Extremes must be thus served. When Bliss and Happiness be in danger of a wreck, boldly to dare it bravely to preserve it. Thou wretched Rival, Obstructor of my Bliss (continued be with a Tone somewhat elevated) I'll give an Exit to thy Love and Life; tho' guarded with a thousand Swords nothing shall secure thee from my Arms: If I fail in the Attempt I shall part with that Satisfaction, I did endeavour your Quiet, though I could not effect it.

O Sir! (quoth Cynthia, with a timorous Agitation of Spirit) do not with fuch a rash Refolution cast away your Life, but consider that Stroke that ends your Days gives a Period to mine. Oh, think in the Custody of what Villains I shall be left, acquainted with nothing but what is ill! Then Death may flye me; and that may be forc'd from me I esteem far above my Life. I shall have none then to participate in my Sorrows, or revenge my Quarrels, when you are gone. Death, when all Hope is past, will not fail to relieve us: Why should we tempt our Ruin? Fortune is full of Viciflitudes; and being unkind so long a time, must at last be just: That Valour is unconquerable to which Discretion is join'd, when wildom directs it for the most Advantage. The caution will be pardonable, when you remember I interceed for Cynthia's Safety in the Welfare of Orfamus. As

B 3

yet

ble

my

rfe

re-

on-

ру

one

la-

ofe

of

the

eli-

my

vou

sta-

ans

nb,

ake

val-

ear

my

ness

Ma-

nay

e of

or-

Ti-

the

ear

uch

rith

be-

yet Respect seems to have the upper Hand in his Thoughts, let us not abuse it to our own Destruction: In the mean time seek to attempt nothing but upon good mature Consideration in each others Life. We may continue fafe, and be good Companions in Adversity; let your Carriage be circumfpect, that we may not fufpect you for other than what you feem; fo you may remain secure, whilft I rest firm guarded with my Innocency. Because he has made you the Agent of his Love, you may feed him with Hope; for it will be dangerous to lose those Advantages he hopes from you. My Carriage unto him shall be followed by your Advice; and you may tell him what your Wisdom and Reafon accords to is convenient; always referving my Honour intire. And seeing Orsamus, I repose my Honour in your trust, look you do not fail my Confidence. O, Madam! reply'd Orfamus, that Life which you fet so high a Prize on is not worth the Care you take to preferve. it; but it were no Life were it not wholly at your Devotion; and being only yours I shall be careful not to cast that Life useless away which is reserved wholly and intire for your Interest. Your Commands shall lead me by the Hand, which I will execute as far as weary Life will go. For your Honour, he that's intrusted with fuch a Treasure, and Safeguards it not, let him live wretched, and detelled die. 'Twere a Sin replied Cynthia, to doubt your Fidelity (taken more kindness into ber Eyes than they express'd before) and the Continuance may not go unrewarded. 'Tis not he that runs swiftly and then faints, but he that continues to the End of the Race, that wins the Prize. But

But let us leave this Discourse for time more agreeable, and consider how to treat the Pirate at his Return, which will not be long. I'll thew myfelf somewhat kinder that he may conceive you have prevailed something in his Behalf: And this kindness if my Expectations fail me not, shall purchase a Relation of his Life which will for a small time free me from this Importunities, and in some fort distipate my Misfortunes by the History of his Disasters, since we naturally find a Pleasure in the Rehearsal of past Miseries. His Respect and Behaviour towards us shews him to be more than what he feems; yet this odious Course makes him feem less than what he is. His Life in my Apprehension must be monstrone that walketh in a Way fo uncommon.

In such Discourses they pass'd away the small Time of the Pirate's Absence; but Fortune foon took Care they should not surfeit of their Joys, by hastening his Return to the Cabbin. And having saluted Cynthia with much Respect as his Mistress, and cares'd Orsamus as her Brother, he seated himself to participate of their Discourse, which he apprehended did tend to his Advantage.

wn

npt

n in

and

our

fuf-

ycu

7ou ith

ofe

ge

nd

ea-

ng

re-

ot

rze

ve.

at

be

ch

A.

d,

m

in

n

-

n

e

E

W.

He was opening his Mouth to speak when the Fair Princess prevented: And taking the Word with an Air repleat, with a Grace and Behaviour only peculiar to herself, she began her Discourse thus. Sir, your Kindness us'd to my Brother is no small Obligation that I own you, nor have you fail'd in your Purpose when you made him your Solicitor; since none can more perswade my Inclination, or more freely dispose of me, than he; yet he, I think.

will not agree to force my Will to what is repugnant. If I must love, I would have a Subject worth my Affection. (Such may your be) if your Life have been regulated and guided by that Rule formerly as in this time since we have been your Prisoners. But the fairest Fruit is not always pleasant to the Taste; nor will a wise Merchant purchase Commodities without a Trial. We may paint the Sun, but not his warm Influence; and the Fire, but not its Heats. With a small Trouble you may ease me of this Doubt, in relating your Extraction and Birth, and the fore past Adventures of your Life.

This bold Language of Cynthia put the Pirate to his Dumps, knowing the Relation of his Life would diminish the Esteem they had already conceived for him: and should he give her a denial he began to sear her first Resolution: So that for a small time his Thoughts were upon the Rack; and he set possess'd with a deep Silence; but at last recollecting himself he made this Reply.

ainfile I set the Schmens

Madam, cease these horrible Resolutions, for I find it impossible to disobey you; you shall be satisfied with a true Narration of the Disasters of a miserable Wretch, injur'd by Fortune, and pursu'd by Fate, the Relation of which will set my Wounds bleeding a fresh, yet Madam, you shall be obeyed. Then prepare yourselves with Attention to receive the Satisfaction you desire, whilst I entertain you with the tragick Story of my Life, which if it cannot beget Love, it may produce Pity.

C

When Orfamus and Cynthia had seated themfelves with regard in Expectation of his Discourse, after he had satisfy'd himself in some particular Niceties and Scruples of his Discourse, with Sadness in his Looks and Actions he began as followeth.

Du

nd

ne

he fe

nt ne le

g

1-

ts h

13

The Tragical History of Almerin and Desdemona.

IN the Mediterranean Sea is fituated an Island call'd Sicillia, renowned over the World for the fweet wholesomeness of the Air, and Fertility of the Soil; extol'd highly for Fame by that wonderful Mountain Atna, there fixed; which being always an the outside cover'd with snow, yet by a sulpherous or brimstone Matter, doth continually burn within. Oftentimes the flame mounting upwards is fo strong, it brings up with it burnt and fcorching Stones, and Pieces of hard Substance, which seems to be rent out of some Rocks, to the great Terror and danger of the Beholder. Report has not been idle in proclaiming the known Rarities of this Isle; but above all, that so much fam'd City of Cyracuse, twenty-two Miles in Compass, Wall'd about with three firong walls for their firength and Security, watered with many fweet fprings adorn'd with many brave Gardens, and pleafant Arbors: The noble buildings added to its Ga-Bs lantry, whose losty Towers and Turrets seem'd to surport the Skies, retaining a Majesty, and yielding a glorious Shew to the Eyes of the Beholders. It was the Mart Town of the Island, from whence Ships go out, and resort thither, to and from all Parts of the World, which mightily enriches the Inhabitants.

Twas this City that gave me Being; altho' my Father had his Original out of Norway, a Kingdom far hence distant, towards the frozen North Pole; his Inclinations being more to Travel strange Countries, than to live a quiet Life in his own; when the one begets nothing but Esseminateness and Sloth, and the other produces Experience and Valour. So that with his Father's Confent, he took his Journey; having well for'd himfelf with fewels and Money, Necessaries very needful for such a Voyage; in a few Years he rang'd over the greatest Part of Africa and Asia; where he saw the Famous Cities of Grand Cairo in Agypt, the City of Jerufalem in Palestina; where he did behold many rare Monuments, with the lofty Pyramids. Having pass'd thro' many large Dominions, at last he arrived at * Constantinople, the Imperial City of the * Bizantium.

Grecian Empire. Here he fpent fome Time; and at last took Shipping there, to visit the Isles of the Mideterranean Sea; so that he came at last to the Famous Island of Sicilia, where the Pleasantness both invited and incited his longer Stay and Abode.

Where by strange Fortunes and unheard of Chances, he was made known unto King Sancredus, who at that Time had his Residence in Syracuse, in whose Affection in a small time he

gaind

gain'd so great an esteem, as he gave him his own kinfwoman in marriage, enrich'd him with several Lordships, made him one of his Councils, and Governor of the samons City of Syracuse.

I was his only Son, and in this City I received both Life and Education, I liv'd with my Father in Garb befitting a Prince rather than a Governor's Son. All their Hope and Comfort they feem'd to treasure up in me. Thus I continued until I arriv'd at the age of fixteen. Years, and became capable to receive the Impression of Love.

m'd

and

Be-

ind.

her,

nich.

ho'

y, 2

zen

e to

iet

ing

her

ith

ey,

in

t of

Ciru-

ny

ds.

at

to

at ia.

ed.

in

he

4

Small time had passed away afterwards before Fortune presented me an Object to beget: it. For Fate had so decreed that in a pleasant Garden belonging to the City, garnished with many private Walks, among which I had chosen out one for privacy, to retire my felf from the: scorching Heat of the Sun, which began to. climb to his Mid-day heighth Here it was I. went to feek Rest, and found eternal Disquiet. For by the Bank of a little Rivolet, which had a Thoroughfare, and many Turnings in the Garden, fate a most beautiful Damfel, who had seated herself as it were to observe the decent gliding of the murmuring Stream. The Place where I had retir'd my felf was fo order'd. by Nature, that I could fee, yet remain unfeen I neglected no time, but took a serious Observation of this Fair unknown : Her Years might be about Fourteen; her Stature not very Tall, But Comely; her Face the perfect Map of Bauty, where the Lillies and the Roses did teem: to furpass in Glory what Dame Nature had a .. ver fram'd, or Art had ever perfected: Her-Eyes, like two resplentdant Diamonds. Each. Parso

Part was so amiable and agreeable, that the most critical and curious Surveyor could not find an error in her whole Composure, each Part sympathizing in a sweet Harmony; over which nature had plac'd a charm, which the most senseless and obdurate Hearts cou'd not relift, but of Necessity must submit.

Thus, Madam, (faid he turning to Cynthia) and more fair you may imagine her to be, or think her like yourfelf, which feems to be the Master-piece of the Gods. And I vow to you, besides the fairest Desdemona, (for so I learn'd afterwards she was called) I never yet faw any Beauty I might parallel or compare with yours. I beheld her with amazement, for never before did my Eyes behold any thing so lovely: Yet that Amazement was accompanied with a transport, which brought forth a delicious Rayishment; and a Rapture of unusual Joys begin to devour the Poison I should have expell'd This fatal Minute was a Prologue to the Catastrophe of my Tragical Misfortunes, I fix'd my Eyes on her Face, with a timerous Disturbance of my Spirits, when raising her Voice, with a bewitching Harmony, and a sweet charming Melody, she chanted this Song.

W

R

CO

fat

Sla

fol

pro

and

gre

the ed 1

beg

out gest Rul

to e

Oh happy time when Nature only sway'd

And all did live in Innocency free:

When all did seem to rule, yet all obey'd,

And every one enjoy'd his Liberty:

When simple truth was thou't the highest skill,

And to deceive a Friend the greatest ill.

But all things pass as they had never been, And Nature brings forth Monsters that rehel, Deceit Deceit is termed Wit, and not a Sin.
What once did Heaven seem is now a Hell, Truth stands neglected, scoff dat with Difgrace, And being disesteem'd hides her Face.

he

ot

ch

er

ot

a)

or

he

u, ly

15.

re

ct

nh-

is

y

e

2

g

Beauty is no Divinity I see,
As falshood would make silly Souls believe, Truth says it is a Map of Misery,
That will the Owner suddenly deceive,
And when a Goddess seems to us to Day, Sickness or Death to Morrow sweeps away.

He which admireth Beauty will confess, That 'tis attended with a fatal Charm, Which is not waited on with good Success,
'Twill do the Owner that enjoys his Harms, Riches and Beauty oft are made a Prize, And robb'd by such as call them Deities.

Thus undifery'd and unperceiv'd I was conquered by this unknown Beauty; and at that fatal lour, without Refistance I became her Slave and with an unwilling Willingness refolved to wear her Chains.

Thus I embrac'd a Passion, which since hath proved fatal to my Quiet, like young Novices in War, that thro' Rashness became Resolute, and without Consideration seem'd to outface the greatest Dangers, not thinking on the Peril their Indiscretion may purchase em, I embarked thus in strange Seas, without a Pilot; and begun to travel the most unknown Ways without a Guide. Yet Nature was so kind to suggest to me, that in the Affair of Love it was a Rule, where first we receive a Wound, there to endeavour a Remedy. And as heat extinguishes guishes Heat, and gives present Remedy to the Pain, so a return of Love gives sudden Ease to the Torments, and a persecure to the Malady. Yet how to make my Addresses unto one, that till then I never saw, or talk of Love to her both seemed gross: The first seemed too sull of Considence, and the other seem'd to savour much of Impudence.

But her Fortune supplied this Want, and at first feem'd to Court me, but 'twas only to drill me into greater Miseries for no sooner I saw her arise from the Place where she sat, but I made towards her, from the Place where I lay conceal'd; when behold, this charming Beauty was furpriz'd by an unknown Stranger, who with Expressions of Joy utter'd these Words, Fortune, I defire thy further Malice and dare my Fate to make a Second Relapse in my Desires. So that by Force, in spight of her Resistance, taking her delicateBody rudely in his Arms, he began with a more than ordinary Pace to convey her to a Neighbouring Thicket. My Eyes had never left her but were wholly employ'd and fix'd on this infolent Action, performed on fo lovely a Creature. I needed no Solicitors but her Cries, to prepare me for a Revenge: And it was but a few Moments betwint the Resolution and the Execution; for with the utmost Diligence I purfu'd him by the same track! saw him pass. Such Expedition I made, that my Haste outwent his Speed, and my Fury overtook him before I had time to confult with Reason: So that without demanding any Questions, I ran him thro' the Body, and he not having disburthen'd himself of his Fair Prey, sell down, clasping her in his deadly Arms. The

D

Ca

11

y

H

The first Thing I did was to free her from him, which with some Trouble I perform'd. After I had set her at Liberty from that Danger, and her frighted Spirits returned to her again, she sell down at my Feet, and embricing my knee, Sir, (said she) this sudden Assistance persuades me to Esteem you as the Genius of my better Fortune, since you have by timely Redemption preserv'd what is more precious to

he

to

y.

at

er

of

ur.

at

ill

er

de

n-

vas

th

ne,

to

at

ng

an

ner

ne-

r'd

ely

ner

vas

ind nce

115.

ut-

im

So

ran

ur-

vn.

he

Her Tears, and sweet Speeches transformed me from my usual Temper; and I could not behold her in that mournful Posture, without participating in her Sorrows. So that taking her up in my Arms I return'd her this Answer : Madam, I rejoyce that the Destinies have made me fo Fortunate in making me the happy Caufe of preserving you. If I have obliged you in this Action I have a Satisfaction above what I could hope, and Fortune has been kind above my Wishes, since few Minutes have passed when I was to feek for fuch an Opportunity to manifest my Affection, O Madam! Blame me not when I reveal I love you. If you think I have oblig'd you, Oh? Pay it in Love, and I shall soon become the Debtor: And talk not of Death when the Gods detell the Propositions: but think, lovely Creature, if fo much Beauty can be without Pity, and yield no Redrefs to my Love, see Beauteous Lady, Death will be kinder than you, and yield a Remedy when you deny it.

This said, (with an Action wholly passionate), I set my Sword against my Breast, saying, Here, Madam, is that that will yield Relief in

Necessity:

Necessity; and seeing I cannot live without your Love I'll endeavour in death to gain your Pity: And if my Love is become an Offence. this very Sword shall make Satisfaction, and destroy that Life that gave it Birth. She no fooner faw this desperate Offer at my Life, but casting an Eye of Pity on my Rashness, Oh. hold (fays she) that fatal Weapon, the cruel Disturber of my Quiet! And think, who'er you be, what an Error I must conclude in vielding to love one that till this Moment I never faw; and how I shall forget paternal duty to give myself away without their Knowledge. Consider what an obligation will lie on you, when I rely upon your promise of Fidelity to preferve my Honour entire; and now the Gods will punish you if you prove perjur'd.

Vertuous Lady (replied I) you wrong my Love to think it base, and my Integrity to imagine I may prove unconstant. No, no, Madam; your Charms are too throng to be rivall'd by any other Objects, and Affection too entire to be deceived by any other beauty. Because you shall not be obliged to love one you know not. and to effeem one that till this Minute you never faw; to disperse those Doubts, know my Name is Almerin, the only Son of Artemidorus Governor of this famous City of Syracufe: never before unfortunate, if you prove pitiles; nor never before this time happy, if you become kind. Madam, if I ever endeavour to violate your Honour, or think to commit fo great a Sacriledge on your Virtue, let all the Gods rain down Vengeance on my Head for my Disloyalty, and let the Heavens be Witness to what I promise.

Oh

iı

h

P

20 fh:

fr

fix

te

pe

fac

fuf

ny

in

her

Ig

Au

ved the

the

was on r mol

on u obli

thei with

Nan

had

Daus

was .

It

T

2.

d

10

12

h.

el

er

in

I u-

w-

on ty

he

ny

m-

m;

by

to

ou

ot.

ne-

ñУ

rus

ne-

fs ;

be-

to

fo

the

my

to

Oh

Oh hold! (quoth she) swear not by that: Cankers may eat a Flower on the Stalk; the scratch of a pin may soon deseat it; and when in these Cheeks and Lips which you extol so high, shall not be left red enough to blush at Perjury, when you shall make it, what will become of me then?

O Madam! (reply'd I) Cease those Doubts, and dissipate such needless Fears: The Sun shall as soon falter in her Career the Stars drop from their Places, where they have of old been six'd, the Earth shall remove, Nature shall alter her course, and all Impossibilities shall be performed, when I prove disloyal.

These Protestations did give her some Satisfaction; and prevailed so far with her, that she fuffered me to enjoy the Privilege to accompany her to her Parents House, which was within the City. When we came thither she gave her Friends to understand the timely Assistance I gave her; and also my Birth and Quality, and Authority in the City. They no fooner received this Relation from their Daughter, but they bad me welcome, and careffed me with the greatest Endearments. My Entertainment was extraordinary; but the Kindness bestow'd on me was not after the lofty Court Mode, but most familiarly, as if I had been a near Relation unto them, and gave me thanks in the most obliging Terms for the Kindness conferr'd on their Daughter, which I could not receive without a Blush. Here it was I learned his Name was Philaster, an aged Knight, that had lived there many Years, that his fair Daughter was his only Child, whose Name was Desdemona.

In feveral Discourses we passed away the Time while Supper lasted, where the chiesest Delicates I fed on was Desdemona's Beauty: And indeed it was she alone made all Things feem pleafant.

Supper being ended, and the Evening far fpent, I pegan to prepare for my Departure. After I had bade Farewel to the Old Knight and his Lady, I began to order myfelf to take Leave of the fainast Desdemona, and in this manner I'accosted her. 'Fairest of Creatures let not Absence beget a Neglect in my Love, but think of the Torments I endure: And tho' Necessity inforces me to leave you, yet think how all Places will feem a Hell when you are absent; and that you bring a Heaven of Felicities when ever your fair felf doth appear. O Desdemona! I must leave you: Yet shall I tell you, a poor Criminal never went to Execution with more Reluctancy than this cruel Parting feems to me, fince I must leave all my Happiness with you, and go away accompanied only with my Torments and Miferies'. I had proceeded farther, but I faw fome attentive, to understand what I said.

Desdemona return'd me no Answer, but a Blush. And after I had with an Extasy sealed a Kiss on her fair Hand I took my leave; yet not before the Old Knight and his Lady defired me that I would honour them fo much as to further oblige them with my Visits. This Compliment over, I was conducted, and accompanied by them all to the Door, where flood a Chariot richly adorned to convey me to my Father's House. Here it was I parted from them, and bid the first Farewel to myfelf.

Te

K

ir

fa

W

re

W

to

D

th

If

m

it

br

be

51

ho

ple

no

th

ing

an wi

Ve

Da

fte

the

Bo

aw.

in

wh

My

felf. I was no sooner arriv'd at my Father's House, but I was welcomed with the greatest Kindnesses that might be; my Presence diverting the Fears of any Dangers that might befal me. They began to enquire how I past away the Evening so late; but I had a Story ready that gave them Satisfaction, After a while I gave them the Good-night, and betook myself to my Rest.

the

fest

ty:

ngs

far

ire.

ght

ake

this

ures

ove,

tho'

ink

are

eli-

ear.

shall

t to

this

eave

y ac-

Mi-

faw

ut a

aled

yet

deli-

ch as

T his

d ac-

here

y me

arted

my-

felf.

But small Rest, Heaven knows, it was I could take: My Fancy form'd the Idea of sair Desdemona; and it was only them Thoughts that did give a small cessation to my torments. If Morpheus had enticed me to a Slumber, immediately her sair Figure would appear. Here it was I did with an extasy of Joy go to embrace this sair Idea of my Missortunes, when behold I clasped the brittle Air, and with my Sleep would the sair Phantom vanish. Oh? how often did I wish I might expire in such pleasing Falshoods: Yet the Gods deemed me not so happy a Lot.

In this fort I pass'd away the Time, thinking the Night exceeded its usual length, exclaiming against Phabus for his sluggish Approach? and yet when he did appear, how often have I wish'd his Ahsence: So that Night seem'd a Vexation, and Day a. Torment. Some two Days passed, and what for want of taking Sustenance in the Day, and for want of Rest in the Night, my Spirits began to decay and my Body became fore-weakened, my Colour faded away, and my vouthful Vigour abated, so that in a few Hours I became only a Shadow of what I was, and an Emblem of what I had been. My careful Parents wonder'd at this fudden Alter-

fo

m

el

fe

vi

fic

C

an

ea

C

an

Sti

for

Ph

up

fte

IW

wa

fec:

Fa

the

wa

we

W

my

a n

the

Was

refi

Rai

wha

Val

Alteration and Charge: The Physicians were fent for, but their Conjectures came far short of the Disease: every one gave his Judgment as Fancy and Opinion gave them Birth, but all came short of the Symptoms of my Disease. My careful Parents never for sook my Pillow, seeking to search out the Cause of this Distemper, that so they might provide a Remedy.

Perhaps you wonder I did not reveal my Love to them at such a time when there was a Possibility of having my Designs granted.

Fairest Lady (said he, looking upon Cynthia) you will not marvel, nor have Occasion to blame me, when you understand that about Six Weeks before I was betrothed by my Pa. rents Consent to a fair Damsel, named Artemesis, second Daughter to the Earl of Palermo. Indeed I think she was more noble than fair, yet her Beauty was not so mean but it might have fatisfied my Nicety, had I never beheld the bewitching Charms of Fair Desdemona. *Twas on this fatal Marriage I was destinated a Victim to my Parents Wills, not my Defires. I knew my Father to be a Man too passionate, and not to be alter'd by Persuasions in his Proceedings. Befides, this Marriage feem'd to augment and agree with his Ambition; and his being ally'd to fo great a Lord, no mean Honour. He was obstinate in his Humours, nor could Reason make him reverse, what he had decreed; but especially those he imagined did tend to further and advance his aspiring Ambition. These were such infallible Truths as I well knew by his Confent would never be re-These were the unhappy Causes that were

I did not reveal to them the Affection I had for the fair Desdemona.

rt of

nt as

t all

My

eek-

per,

my

as a bia)

to bout

Pa.

Trie.

rmo.

fair.

ight

held

ona.

ated

ires.

nate,

Pro-

l to

l his

Honor

had

did

nhi-

as I

re-

that

As from an Extream doth issue a second more dreadful than the sirst, so from this sewel of Love did proceed a burning Fever, more searful and violent than the sormer. This was visible to the Eye of Nature, so that the Physicians by their Skill and Industry removed the Cause before it could take any deep Essex, and performed the Cure before ever the Disease had taken Root.

As nothing continues always in one State and Condition, so my Distemper began to abate. and my weaken'd Body began to recover alitle Strength; yet in my Mind I received no Comfort, lince my dearest Physician was absent. Phabus had scarce run his Career thrice in this upper World, and lodged himself in the Western Ocean, but I left my Bed; and although I was extreme feeble, yet I did endeavour to walk: and the first small Journey I made, was fecretly to Desdemona. I had no sooner set my Face towards that Part of the City, but mark the wonderful effects of Love; altho' my Body was weak, yet methought in every Step I went towards her I received new Strength: When I was arrived, and entered the House my Body became as if it had been inspir'd with a new Soul; and well it might, fince it was there alone the Felicity and Content which was the Extasy and Rapture of my Soul, did reside. Which imagination did beget a sweet Ravishment of Pleasure: So that the Want of what I had so long defired had set the great Value of what I then enjoy'd. Such

ve

vhi

ng

d

ir'

ore

air

The

ti

his

hou

vhe

ee,

vha

ou

Hea

ve

or

WO

car

Rem

ang

bw,

ir, i

te i

nd o

erfo

uni

Ate Mad

hat

cur

0

Si

F

Such unthought of Alteration had my small Time of Sickness begotten on me, that none in the Houfe could hardly guess to discern what I might be; but them Thoughts were filenced when I revealed myfelf: So that they feem'd to be posses'd with Amazement rather than with Unbelief. In a few Moments all their Suspicions were vanish'd, so that I was entertained with their accustomed Kindnesses. In a few Moments fair Desidemona did appear; and although she was forewarned by some in the House, yet in the first approach she could not contain from Wonder. She hade me welcome as Deliverer, not as Lover! yet did her Eyes fpeak Pity to my Disasters; and then her Looks seem'd a Sovereign Balsam to expel the worst of Miseries: What shall I say, 'twas here my Sickness took its Birth, and 'twas here I had the only Remedy to expel it.

After Dinner the old Knight and his Lady, with fair Desdemona, invited me to take a Walk into a fair Garden adjoining to their house beautified with shady Arbours. Where Nature was holpen by Art to make the Work more exquisite: and was adorned with many pleasant Walks.

But in the midst of the Garden was a House of Pleasure, the fairest for Workmanship that ever I beheld, so that Nature grew envious that Art should excel her; endeavouring with sine shady Trees, and what sweet Summers Livery wears, to conceal it from the Eyes of the Spectators, when the pretty Birds that harbour in those Boughs, seem to cross her Intents with their Melodious Notes; inviting the Eyes of the Beholder not to leave so rare a Work unseen.

111

in

at

ed b

an

eir

er-

1 2 nd the

not

me

yes

her the ere

re I

dy,

e a

heir

here ork

any ouse

that

rious with

s Li fthe

har-

Into

erform

Into this Garden I accompanied them, where we had some Discourse on different Subjects, which I think impertinent, and nothing relatng to the Story of my Life. Thus having paffed away some time, Philaster and his Lady reir'd themselves into the House of Pleasure beore related, and left Desdemona only to enterain me. This Opportunity fell out above my Thoughts; and being unwilling to lose so fair time, as we walked along the Alleys I began his Discourse.

Fairest Desdemona, I can't tell whether I hould say you are more kind than cruel; or whether you are more fair than I am miserable. ee, my divine Lady, behold I die alive : And what is more cruel than living Death? Can't ouPity one that dies for Love? Oh, pierce my Heart! It is the nobler way; and let me not ve in fuch Torments.

Sir (faid she) I am not insensible of your love, for do I take any Pleasure in your Torments; would I could perform the one as willingly as can the other, you should not languish for a Remedy; if a return of Love and Compassion an give you ease, I can pity: If that be too bw, I can grieve: If this will not do, think, ir, in what Bands you are bound not to viote my Honour. Oh! Seek not to ruin this, nd command all Things besides I am able to

O Madam (reply'd be) Heaven send all those unishments on my Head I so lately did invoate if I intend Dishonoer to your Person: No tents Madam. 'Tis lawful Marriage I defire: And the what is more honourable? This Way you may are a sturely give a Cassation to my Torments, and not injure your Chassity. Oh! Think if you can pity, as you give me to understand you can be not cruel to let me pine away with forrow, when you are the only Physician that can give a Remedy.

I had scarce finish'd these last Words, but Old Philaster, with his Lady, left the Place where they had remained this small time of our Discourse; and their too sudden Appoach robb'd me of Desdemone's Answer. So that we made towards them : and joining our Company and Discourse with theirs, we passed away the Residue of that time; Fortune not offering me that Day another Opportunity where I might with Secrecy renew our aforesaid Discourse. After a while we left our Diversions; Philaster for fook the Garden, and we attended him in, where we spent the Remainder of that Day, which my Imagination told me, did steal too swiftly away, fince for fook my dearest happiness, and must be forced to part from my fairest Desdemona. After Salutations pass'd with the old Lady, I went and took my leave of my Charmer. And altho' my Desires were frustrated, and my intentions prevented, of speaking unto her, by reason of her Parents being prefent, yet my Eyes and Countenance fecretly fpoke the Language of my Heart; as far as I could conceive I did not find she had any Averfion for my Love; neither could I perceive in her Countenance and Looks, or in any of her Actions, the did betray any Dislike to my Proceedings: But I found her not like your lofty Dames, scornful and disdainful, but the contrary.

Wo

I

a

f

fe

u

be

m

an

W

th

co

go

Bro

lute

def

felf

bui

the

now

app

give

Hou

I wa

tainr

that

with

Mer

Phile

pass

Whic

ou

an

w, ve

ace

of

ach

we

pa-

vay

e I

Dif-

ns:

ded

that

feal

hap-

fair-

with

my

ftra.

king

pre-

retly

as I

vet-

ve in

f her

my

your

t the

Wo

IR

With this hope of my good Fortune I gave Philaster the good night, and returned secretly Home to my Father's, where they all wondered at my long Absence, yet glad to see me recover'd fo well, wondring from whence the Caufe of fo fudden a Sickness should arise, as also at so unordinary a Recovery: But leaving them to furmise on Conjectures, to learn out that which as yet they did not know, I went to my Chamber where I pass'd away the Night in a different manner from what I had formerly done, my Hopes now having overcome my Lespairs, and comply'd with all things that might jump with my Defires. In fuch pleafing I houghts the Hours pass'd away; yet not so swift but I could number them, and think them flow in going.

Titan by her Absence gave warning of her Brother's Approach; and Phoebus had scarce saluted the Eastern Parts of the World with his defired Presence, but I arose and attired myfelf with a more than ordinary Curiofity; building many hopes in Expectation of what the following Day might bring forth, which now began to grow a little aged; and the hour approach'd wherein Visits are accustomed to be given; fo that I took my Way to Philaster's House. As my Visits became more common. I was esteemed a less Stranger, and my Entertainment was more familiarly and friendly: So that after some Discourse had passed, and the Sun with his warm Beams began to climb to his Meridian height, I requested the Favour of Philaster, that I might take the Priviledge to pass some small time away in his fair Garden. Which request was kindly granted, himself

vhi

s ft

t 1

nu

ain

Con

avo

ield

ut :

ime

F

erfa

hat

lequ

ith

y fu ch i

of of

hvy

w

bunt

holl

Aful

earm

urfe ffect

ent c ig th

elicit

appii

· Bu

witho

eape

ney i

weet ich v

intending to accompany me; when behold, as we were entering the Garden, he was fent for by a Messenger, that inform'd him that his Brother did attend him, defining some Conferences with him about earnest Occasions that would not admit of Delay, so after pleading Necessity for his untimely parting, he left me.

Half an Hour had not pass'd fince I enter'd the Garden but I saw fair Desdemona; who, was sent by her Father to entertain me in his Absence. I made towards her with much Respect, and she accosted me with as kind a Reception, with such Innocency as might seem to bring in compass the Extravagant Thoughts of any but myself; for they yielded Fewel to my unbounded Desires, and every Action of hers became an Oil to augment it, till it began to blaze into a Flame, which not extenuated, must needs consume in itself.

Here it was we betroth'd ourselves each to other, and register'd our Vows in Heaven before the Divine Deities. Here it was I could not bound my Joys, and consequently my Pasfion; fo that I could not refrain from folding her delicate Body in my Arms, giving and receiving many a fweet Kiss on her Ruby Lips. In this Rapture of Ravishment we spent the time, till Sol, with his Scorching Beams, forc'd us to retire into that pretty House of Pleasure, (before mentioned) This proved a Defence against the Heat, and a Covert to act our Loves more fecurely. Here we did double our Kisses and Embraces, while the pretty Birds did feem to participate in my happiness. Yet like a poor decay'd Man, who would think himself happy in the Possession of a small Estate which

as by

0-ces

ot

r'd

10, ect.

on.

r in

but

un-

me

into

h to

be-

Paf-

ding

re-

ips.

the

ams,

fe of a

o act

ouble

retty

ines.

Hate

which when he obtains he rests not there, but sfill aspiring to whatever is above him; and t last climbs to so great height, that to connue is dangerous, and to fall is a most cerain ruin. This was a lively Similitude of my Condition, wherein I did then remain: The avours the then conferr'd on me could not ield Content and Satisfaction to my Defires, ut served only to beget a Confidence to preme to purchase greater, and aspire to high-Felicities. So that from the familiar Conersation I began to request the Fruition of hat Love I then enjoy'd: And following my Request with fuch Intreaties and Importunities with a Promise of never-failing Fidilty, urged y fuch strong Persuasions, and resisted with hch faint Denials, that I came to the yielding of that Fort which the greated Kings might envy me the Conquest of: In the Enjoyments of which Imperial Monarchs would have accounted it the highest Felicity; All which was wholly prostrated to my raging Passion, and liftful Defires. The Kiffes, Embraces and Encarments were almost numberless, out Difourse treating wholly of our Loves and fervent ffections of the Day of Marriage. Thus we ent our time in a Paradice of Pleasure; pasig them few Minutes we stay'd there in fuch elicity as might well be termed the chiefeft appiness of Lover's Bliss.

But the fweet blooming Rose is not pluck'd without a Thorn, nor the dearest Pleasure reaped without Discontent: They are Honey in the Mouth, but Gall in the Belly; sweet in the Taste, but bitter in the Digestion, ich was the Fruition and Enjoyment of my dearest

C 2

D

Ot

pe

he

M

ba

thi

ruj

por

Fel

con

· A

· d

4 T(

· u

·V

· de

· E

"ar

· fc

"af

e ne

" an

wil

only

mor

fear

dearest Desdemona to me; a Moment of Hap. piness, attended by an Age of Sorrow: So that Pleasure serves only to make my Calamity more mournful, and the Felicity I have loft, to make me the Lofer more wretched.

" Hanibal, the Brave African Conqueror, is praised, in that he knew how to gain Victo ries, but difcommended, because he could not fecure them: Lofing by Indifcretion what by Discretion he had so bravely gained. was my Misforture! I knew how to purchase Happiness, but not to continue it. Such is the Folly of poor Mortals: One runs after Riches, and with great Care and Pains ob tains the Felicity of his Defires, which is foon forgotten in the Possession Another follows · Honour, as the Elixir of his Hopes, which foon fades in the Enjoyment. A third hunt after Beauty. as the Elifian of his Content, which vanishes in the Fruition.' Thus we play with Happiness till it is lost unto us; and feed fo greedily on our Pleasures till being over cloy'd we loofe our Hopes and Sense of the Fellcity we enjoy, and then too late we repent of our Ignorance and Folly, and prize the worth of that which is loft unto us above the Efteen we had when we did enjoy it.

O fatal Emblem of my Misfortunes, and unfortunate Similitude of my Miseries! To prize too late the Jewel of my Soul, which have lost by Forgetfulness and Neglect! Ro pentance comes too late; or if it did not could not expect a Pardon. O my dearest Desdemona! Which seemest lovely in the · Grave! Whose Remembrance must be sweet ento me, tho' thou lyest forgotten in the Dul Hen

Iap.

that

more

nake

or, is

icto-

d not

Such

chase

ich is after

s ob-

foon

llows

which

hunt

ntent,

e play

1 feed

over-

ent of worth

iteem

! To

hich I

! Re-

not

dearel

fweel Daft Her Here the Sense of Grief put a Stop to his Discourse while he fixed his Eyes carelessy on the Ground. Or samus and Cynthia beheld each other with Amazement in their Looks, in Expectation of the Issue of his Discourse, which he usher'd in with so bad a Prologue, and so Mournful an Action and Gesture.

By this time Almerin had recollected his Thoughts, and raising his Eyes from the Ground, where the Time of his Extaly they had continu'd unmow'd, and fixing them on Cynthia, Madam, said he, Can you pardon this abrupt failing in my Discourse occasion'd by a Transport of Grief, in the remembrance of my former Felicities in the Relation I have already given you compared with what I must now relate unto you? As Hunger makes the meanest Fare sweet and delicious to the Taste, so the Sense of Sor-'row produces Felicity more lovely, and makes us prize every pretty Happiness as its true Worth: Grief is like the Sun at its going down, which yields our Shadows in the Evening more great and monstrous than they are, which when Day was in its Glory did fcarce appear. Like a prospective Glass, which afar off yields the Object at an unufual bigness, which being removed to a nearer distance we can hardly discern, Such, (Madam) will be the residue of my Discourse; which will only serve as a Mirrour to make my Loss seem more lovely, and the Grief I now poffess more fearful and dreadful.

But to defer your Expectation no longer I'll go forward in my Discourse, and give you to understand, that after I had quitted Old Philaster's Hospitality and Kindness with the Theft of his Daughter's Honour; and against the Vows I had made, by Inticements and Deceit. I had forgotten the fairest lewel in Desdemona's Wardrobe, we faw him and his Lady enter the Garden. With all Expedition we forfook our Delights, and descended down a Private Pair of Stairs, unseen of them, being shaded by the friendly Trees, which in the time of our Delights feem'd to stand as Watchmen to defend us, and now a Screen to secure us. This way we pass'd least they might suspen what indeed was true, and fo prepar'd to meet 'em; and having passed some secret Alleys, we met 'em as accidentally. Here we joined Company and Discourse with them, and passed away the refidue of Time till Dinner was brought in; upon which Notice given, we left the Garden, and spent the remainder of that Day altogether in feveral forts of Diversion, till Night began to approach, and require my Abfence; so that Necessity urged my Departure; and returning them many Thanks for their Civilities and Kindnesses, I took my Leave of Philafter and his Lady; and having faluted Dejdemona with a Promise of a sudden return, to require her in Marriage of her Parents, according to my Vows in the Garden, I left her, and with her all my Joys.

In my Way homeward my Spirits began to grow dull and heavy, my Mind became fad and Melancholy; I found myself fearful, yet knew mi

D

th

Cr

O

gu

te

pi

bu

ne

go

tr

as

fe

be

Z

u

A

nger

e you

Old

h the gainst

1 De-

esde-Lady

2 We

wn a

seing

time

men

e us.

spect

meet

om-

ed aught

the

Day till

Ab-

Ci-

Phi-

de-

re.

ding

vith

and

ew

no

no Cause I had to fear: On the sudden, Three Drops of Blood diftill'd from my Nofe, a Hare thwarted my Way, and a Night-Raven came croaking, and, with her dismal Note hovered over my Head. This confirm'd me in my Augury that fomething ominous and fatal did attend me, yet I knew not from whence it could proceed I 'Had forgot to look up to Heaven, and confider I stood a Criminal there; but began to confider what might proceed from meaner and lower Causes; not confidering that Heaven makes all things, in this Ball of Clay the Earth, serve as Punishments to the Wicked: Sometimes fo strange and intricate his Divine Working is, that the Punishment is bound up with the Pleasure; as it happen'd now with me.

For I no sooner arrived at my Father's House but I sound him inquisitive above his usual manner to know where I had pass'd away my Time these three Days past; my Absence having begotten a suspicion in him of what indeed was true, and my sudden Sickness, seconded with as quick a Recovery, did confirm him: So that seeing me well recover'd, and almost in as good a State of Health as when I first fell Sick, he began his Discourse to me in this manner.

Son (said he) your sudden Health tannot give me more Joy than the extraordinary Cause gives me suspicion, lest in your Carriage, which bath been so reserved to me, you should all any thing which should fail contrary to my Intentions and Desires. You know the time will draw shortly near when you must marry your contracted Bride, Fair Artemesia; one which is as Fortunate as Fair, and as Wise as Fortunate: One, my Son that will raise thee to a high Esteem of high Honours which is the Mistress young Gallants Court. And by the Alliance of so great a Lord we shall be made shot-free against the strongest Batteries of Fortune.

The Discourse so contrary to my Expectation, and Defires, and fo fatal to my Love, affur'd me of the doleful Prefages of fo unhappy a Beginning: So that these Forerunners of my Misfortunes did portend and foretel fome cruel Alteration and fudden Change in my prefent Estate of Happiness. Reason could now tell me, though too late, that in all the Vicifitudes and Changes of Fortunes, having once arrived at the chief Felicity we fixed on, as our only object, we fairly descend by those Steps by which we first did afcend. Nay, Fortune is fometimes fo cruel as not to allow them that Leifure; but envying them the Felicity they have purchased, throw them down headlong from their Happiness, and cruelly breaks the Neck of their Hope. This taught me to know, any more, to mistrust and fear, that from the Fruition of Desdemona's Beauty and Love I should reap but a poor Harvest; and that my Promises would exceed my Incomes: Not that I could think myfelf unfortunate in the Enjoyment of my Desdemona's Love; but contrary, I thought myself wretched in the many Stops, Dangers, Cafualties, Fears and Accidents, which began to shew themselves as Obstructions, to hinder me from the Continuance of so sweet a Felicity. These things I traversed in my Thoughts; fo that at last I began to dare his utmost Anger, and resolved to stand the Charge of it rather than conceal my Love; well knowing if it were once reveal'd I should be rid of the

utme V Bloc whice

th

ce

fol

am

mi

pai

Af

De

you

kno

wil

att

Lif

ness

my. Vif

his

Sot

to d

your fion ed l poie the Fear that did always wait on the fecreat concealing of it. Look wars in the rich

the

bot-

. .

cta-

af-

PPy

my

ome

ore-

won

ciffi-

ar-

our

teps

tune

that

hey

ong

ow,

the

e I

my

that oy-

y, I

ops,

nich

, to

veet

my

his

irge

ow-

the

Having fix'd on Thoughts as my last Refolves, putting myself in a Posture and Action that might rather persuade his Pity than his Anger, Sir, said I, Your suspicions are not grounded amis; if you suspect I Love; and if I be a Criminal in making it a Seacret unto you forgive and pardon me when I shall make a real Confession. Yes, Sir, I do love, and with that Ardour and Affection, with that Constancy and Fidelity, as Death cannot divert my Inclinations : And Should you make a Separation, or imagine an Alteration, know, Sir, my Vows are registered in Heaven with the Divine Deities, which if you once endeavour to violate expect the Punishments may attend your endeavours. You may command my Life since you give it me; but not my Soul, it is a Gift of the Gods.

This Discourse, utter'd with as much Boldness as Considence, began to arise a Storm in my Father's Countenance; for the Form of his Visage began to overcast with Frowns, and all his Actions became clouded over with Anger. So that Casting a frowning Look on me, enough to daunt me, had not my Love made me Proof against his Fury, and consident to sustain his utmost Charge.

Villain, reply'd he, and Shame to thy Blood, Dare you juitify and vindicate that which is contrary to my Intentions? or can your Disobedience own what I have an Aversion against? Shall my Hope be thwarted by your Extravagant Youth and my Purposes frustrated by your ill placed Love?

CS

Curfe

mo

ho

it y ane

not

dan

mo.

ne

' jai

· wa

· M

t the

ing

· he gri

· by

· Bea

'deep

the.

Mar

thin

caftin

Pit.

and

Fall

Curse on your wilful Obstinacy, which puts me into this unufual Passion; and your boldness, that durft give me this Relation. Ungovern'd young Man I Can you think this giddy-headed Youth fubject to all Passions, and pliable to all Impressions should better know how to govern his Passione, and direct his Actions, that his Aged Sire? Can he better chuse for his Good, than one who hath fo often been acquainted and concern'd with the Vicifitudes and Changes of this Nature? No, no, young Man, you yet want experience, which is always the best School master, and the Mistress of Understanding. Your Youth is unruly, and like a head-strong Horse that will run himself on any Dangers, without he be furely curb'd: So you grow bold and impudent; daring any Precipice to you may possess your unbounded Desires. But now I'll curb you in from these Extravagancies, and restrain you from these wild wandering Thoughts: And if I have been too indulgent, for the future you shall find me as severe. And so avoid my Sight, that by the want of Duty are become a Grief to my Eyes, and a Vexation to my Soul; and fee that at our next Meeting you show not the least Aversion against your Marriage with Artemefia; but that you bound your Love and Defires in the Compass of my Will, and that you tread no strange Path, but that you reform and recollect yourielf first, by taking your Rules from me; and not resolutely to run yourself headlong to Ruin, and me to Difhonour: But if you have any extravagant love, destroy it whilst it is young in the Bud; and learn to forget it before you come to the Knowledge of what it is. Return no Answer to justify what I must condemn, but regulate your Ways and Life by my Directions; and having fo fure

e

at

h

1-li-

25

10

th

0, ch

efs

nd

on

So ci-

es.

va-

nd-

ul-

re.

)u-

X3-

et-

our

ind

my

but

by

ely

Dif

ve.

and

-wo

ays

a Guide you cannot err, or go astray. But if you continue still obstinate and audacious in your Proceedings you shall find I'll disinherit you both of my Love and Estate, and make account of you but as a Stranger, and a Reble to my Blood.

Having said this he left me and departed, But alas! How can I describe to you the Grief that did seize on me at that Time when Describe mona came to my Remembrance, and my Father's Cruelty was fresh in my Memory! Oh, how was I torn between Love and Duty! Now it was Love that led me in amaze so dissicult and intricate, that my best endeavours could not keep me from Ruin. To go forward was dangerous, but to return backwards did shew more Perilous.

Like a poor Traveller in a defart Wilderness, Pursued by a fearful, hungry, leanjaw'd Beaft, who in most fearful Manner always follows him to devour him. The poor Man thinks by his strong Travel to avoid the Evil beaft that still follows him; but being quite beaten out by long Travel and Fear, he stands in amaze; to go out of his Way is grievous, and to return back is present death. Affrighted with his Danger, he endeavours by Craft (as his last Remedy) to deceive the Beaft in his Pursuit. By chance he espies deep Pit by the Way fide, and a little below the Pit's brim grows a Twig, which the poor Man feeing, goes and takes hold of the Twig, thinking thereby to avoid the Beaft; but then casting his Eyes down to the Bottom of the Pit, he fees a number of Serpents, Dragons, and other venomous Beafts, waiting for his Fall to devour him; then casting his Eyes up he fees the hungry lean-jaw'd Beaft krawing afunder the Twig that he holds by; whereby he is bereft of all Hope and Help, and left to * his devouring Enemies.

Such, Madam, was my desperate Condition: My sweetest Hopes began to leave me, Horror and Despair began to possess me, and Fear raised out the Expectation of a more happy Change. This confirm'd me in the ominous Presage that did befall me in my return homeward

2

b

W

fo

fo P

T

w

Fa

me

and

gat He

to w fo fi

I

Craf

ons 1

deare

With

from my dearest Desdemona.

How uncertain is Felicity that is raised on an uncertain Foundation! It is as soon raised as raised, as soon destroyed as founded. Such was mine; who not two Hours before did imagine the Destricts could not work a change in my Happiness, sound now by Experience the Mutability and Alteration of Earthly Felicities, in finding myself Miserable, that in so small a Time before esteem'd myself happy above the Reach of Fortune.

After I had well weigh'd and confider'd all the Difficulties on either fide that might befal me, I resolved at last that my love should reign supream, and remain entire to Fair Desdemona; but yet withal, that I would shew a yielding Consent to my Father's Will in my Marriage with Artemesia; and like to a Waterman, that Row one way, and look another, yet bring the Boat to the desired Place; so I endeavour by this Policy, seeming to accord with my Father's Desires, when my Inclinations roved a contrary Course; and whilst openly I did comply with him, inwardly I might procure my own Content; stattering myself, that as Formune had made so sudden a Change in my happing nefs, in some small time she might beget as great an Alteration in my Missortunes, and at last bring me to the Period of my Desires; of which, though I had small Cause to hope, yet I did not wholly despair, since I did daily behold as great Mutations and Changes happen,

n:

or-

ear

py

re-

ard

on

l as

was

gine

my

Mu-

ties,

all a

the

d all

befal

reign

ona;

ding

riage

that

g the

ar by

Fa-

come my

For-

ness

I did further refolye not to acquaint Defdemona with my Father's Resolutions lest it might beget her discontent, which would more diflurb my own Quiet, My Intentions now were quite alter'd, and I began to repent my foolish Rashness, in revealing what I should have kept fecret. But now I did intend to conceal my Passion for the future, fince I had only given Manifestation of my Love, and not of the Perfon beloved, which I did expound as one happy Presage of my more unfortunate Proceeding. This way I had fix'd on, fince I had no other wherein I might walk with more Security. Nor did my Hopes altogether fail me; for by my crafty Wiles, the next time I accosted my Father, I had fet so strange a Face on my former Proceedings, shewing myfelf so dutiful and pliant to all his Intents and Purpofes, as begat Wonder in him when he did behold it. He question'd of me who this Object might be. to whom I did shew so great, and seem'd to have fo firm an Affection not long fince, which now I did feem to flight.

I understood very well the Subtleness and Craft he us'd, and how like myself his Actions were working one Way, and his Desires another, but both agreeing to intrap me in my dearest Secrets. But Old Birds are not caught with Chaff: for he could not so closely work his Mine to deceive me. But I as privately made

my

my Countermine to blow up; which I performed in this Manner.

Sir, reply'd I, your are too Passionate in your last Discourse; and what I proposed only to try your Inclinations, how you would have allowed of a Charge, if I could have admitted by an Alteration, this you took to be a Verity, and too severely rebuked me for what was only Fiction; not allowing me one Moment or Time, wherein I might disable you in your Error, and ask your Pardon for my over consident Presumption, in raising so great a Tempest from so small a Cause, and that I have not, nor never will, six my Affections without your Approbation.

This Compliance to his Will, fo contrary to his Expectations, began to work Wonders in his Mind, when my Artifice had perfauded him that all my former Discourses and Protestations were mere Deceit; so that instead of continuing so fierce in his Proceedings, he became more mild, his Choler abated, he left accusing me, and began to excuse himself. I soon laid hold of this Opportunity, aggravating his Mistake, yet by always wherein any likelihood did appear exempting myself from Blame. And so far did I infinuate myself into his Soul of my Innocence in the Cause that he suspected me that my Deceit became approved Verities, and what I could relate in my Defence received as undoubtrd Truths; so that I think he never parted from me with a greater show of Love and Satisfaction than at this Time.

By .

6

· 1

. 1

· F

· re

· ne

CO

·K

·H

the the

W

ry to

decei

Wrou

in V

mani

fo the ner b er.

in

fed

uld

ad-

e a

10-

OU

0-eat

t I

ons

to

in ons nu-

me

ing

ke,

ap-

l fo my

me.

and 29 ver

and

By .

By this you may guess at the over credulous Belief of old Age, which is most sube ject and prone to believe each Senseless Story and wonder at what is related, although the · Sense many times comes far short of the Truth, because his Years have been Spectators of Alterations and Accidents as Strange; fo that he believes what he does not fee, and perhaps never was done, by the Example of somethings strange and rare. So willing are they to believe Possibilities, wherein we see small likelihood of Truth. But such will soon be traduc'd, and drawn to believe Falshoods; how eafily will they be brought to embrace a Fiction, adorned in the Robes of Truth; such an one as may jump with their Defires and Wishes! For we all find ourselves apt and ready enough to be deceived, and with eagerness hug the Deceit, when it sweetly holds Correspondency with our Hopes; the Luftre of which blinds us from feeing the Falshood, or else like a jealous Husband, we fear to difcover what we would not know; when the Knowledge of that revealed may dettroy the Happiness we enjoy, and confequently bring the Disquiet that we fear.

Whether this occasioned my Father's enquity to cease I cannot tell, but I well know I deceived him in his own Crast, and overwrought him in his own Device. Neither did I in Words alone confirm him in his Belief, but manifested the same in my Carriage and Actions, so that a Week or ten Days passed in this manner before I did offer in the least to absent myself from my Father's House. After which time I did fecretly and privately many times visit and converse with my levely Desdemona, but I made my Visits much shorter, which was foon preceived and taken Notice of by Defdemena, who urg'd a Confummation of our Marriage; fearing, as indeed afterwards it happended, that some unhappy Obstruction might defer it. I comforted her amidst these Fears with my Promise of Loyalty, and with my best Endeavours to procure my Father's Confent; which if I should fail of, I firmly engaged to perform all the Rites of Marriage at the end of one Month's time from thence next enfuing. With this Promise she remained satisfy'd, at d in her Satisfaction I refled highly contented. We agreed, lest my often Resort should beget Jealousies of that which as yet her Parents had no Mistrust, that by a secret Way into the Garden I shou'd have access at certain times, when I might secretly enter: Which to perform either we appoint a time at our parting, or elfe by a certain Token of a Hankerchief that gave me affurance I might securely pass:
time

By fuch fecret and unmistrusted Paths I of tentimes visited my dearest Lady, who received me with as kind Endearments; where I oftentimes enjoy'd without Controul the happy Felicity and Fruition of her Love. But what Man is possessed of a Mine of Wealth, which does not bring with it Cares and Dangers. As the Bee carries Honey in her Mouth, but a Sting in her Tail; fo unlawful Pleasures feem Heaven in their Performances, but Hell in the Continuance.

In this bitter Sweets, and stolen Pleasures, some Three Months had pass'd since I first saw Delde-

And In

I

mi no cee

Cou mou my

Confrathe

to fla continuation variou well re Ocean feek to on a w

the tin married brance Desdemona, and almost One since I had made her the last Promise of Wedlock. Now the time began to draw near to confirm by Marriage, what I had already perform'd by Contract with Artemesia; and now alass, my dearest Desdemona found herfelf conceived and quick with Child, In neglecting the first I was fure to procure my Father's Displeasure but in the latter, before God and Man, I could not quit myself of the grievous Ingratitude. In the first my Ignorance might excuse me; but to the latter I could plead no excuse, fince my Vows to Desdemona proceeded from my very Soul, and no doubt had pierced the Gates of Heaven; when my Contract with Artemesia was performed only of Course, and in Satisfaction of my Father's Humour, and not for any Inclination or Love on my Part. So I resolv'd to continue firm and constant to Desa mona, and procure my own Content, in hazarding my Father's Displeasure rather than to fatisfy his Ambition with my own Torment.

Had I continued here I had stood firm; but the Biass of Fortune is too feeble for a Man to stand secure on, and too much Moving to continue constant; and the Mind of Man is as various as Fortune, is sickle and unconstant. As well may a Man build a spacious Castle on the Ocean, or a strong wall'd City in the Air, as seek to ground a Foundation, or raise a Building on a weak Resolution.

This, Madam, you will see verify'd in me for the time approached in sight wherein I must be married to Artemesia, but not the least Remembrance was given me by my Father for a Preparation

5

i-d, eft ;

nd ng. rd ed.

get had

hen elfe

save I of eiv'd ften-

Fewhat hich ers i

fures Hell

fures, it faw Delde

paration; so that I began to bury the Thought of it in forgetfulness, thinking some difference had lately happened between my Father and Artemasia's Parents so that I began to account myfelf fecure as to that.

But a change of Fortune foon put me out of that Mind; for one Morning when I did least suspect such Deceit, my Father defired me to array myself im my best Attire, and wait on him to the great Temple of the City. This I performed with great Willingness, not mistrusting that any Deceit or Treachery had lain hid in his Request; so that I ran headlong to my Ruin, and before I could find the Depth of this Plot, I found myself Shipwrek'd on a Rock, I was no sooner ready but I attended him to Church, only accompanied with my Mother, who was of his Confederacy. We foon arrived at the Temple, yet with more Hafte than good Speed, for I was no fooner enter'd, but to my Amezement I faw the Earl of Palermo, with his Daugter Artemefia, with all his and my Father Friends attending him, richly attired, and the Priest standing ready to join our Hands. They all came to receive and welcome me with much Respect, but my Amazement would not let me receive their Kindnesses and Endearments with a Behaviour as I ought to have done, for it was fuch a strange and unacceptable Sight, that could not fuddenly recover from my Aftonia ment; rather thinking it to be a Dream or Fiction, than any thing elfe,

My Father came and rous'd me from the Trance: Son, (faid be) wonder not at what

704

0

he

fer

do

is a fuc

of.

Go

I ha

forn

nor

feal'd

this c

will

fince

Soul.

its C

Soul :

My A

E. G. Lin Line

you see, but recollect yourself, and embrace your Fortune. Surprizes in Love make them of greater Value. And this Business was managed by me, that a Blessing that falls on you unlook'd for, might be by you more prized and esteemed. Cease your Marvel then, and accoss those Friends with Respect that are ready to receive you.

ght

nce

and

unt

east

e to

per-

fling

id in tuin

Plot,

W25

urch,
o was at the

peed,

maze-

Daug-

ther's

nd the

They

much

et me

s with it was

that tonih-

m or

om thi

at wha

* you

His Discourse being ended and all the Company having drawn themselves together to hear my Reply : You bid me diffipate my Amazement (faid I) but my wonder growing great, I must confess Artemesia is a Fortune above my Hopes or Deferts; yet such a one as I cannot with fafety posses, nor welcome it with content, lest by enjoying such a Happiness, I should enforce the heavenly Deities to make her wretched and miferable for my Sake. For to put you out of doubt, know I am betroth'd already to, one that is as Virtuous as Fair; with whom I have tied fuch an inviolable Knot, that 'tis past the Art of Man to unloose it, without provoking the Gods to a Revenge; There's no promise but I have made it, no Protestation but I have performed it, no Ceremony but I have fign'd it, nor is there any Obligation or Vow but I have feal'd it. Heaven hath joyned our Hearts, this can only join our Hands. In this Reason will tell you I have shewn no Disobedience; fince as I lately told you, Heaven gave me a Soul, and 'tis only that I have dispos'd of with its Consent: My Body is yet free which you gave me; but it may as well furvive without a Soul as revoke the Vows I have lately made. My Affection is so entire, that if all things admit of Change it cannot be subject to AlterAlterations. And should Death itself approach

I should continue firm in my Grave.

I had continued my Discourse, but my Father halfily interrupting me drew his Sword and presented against my Breast. Die thou Rebellious Villain, faid he, and enjoy the Fruits of your Affection in the Duft. This Action was no fooner taken Notice of by Artemesia, but she freed herfelf from her Father; and casting herfelf before my Father's Weapon, Hold faid she barbarous and unnatural Man, and Pierce this Breaft 'twill shew less borrid and inhuman. This unexpected Action with his Friend's Persuasions and Intreaties, made him sheath his Sword. whilst a Salamander did seem to live in his Eyes which shot forth fire like a murdering Canon, that lighten' e'er it smoaks. Wicked Wretch, faid he I disown thee from this Hour from being my Son, and revoke all Ties and Privileges that Love or Nature bath given thee: I difinberit the of all; and do not dare from this Minute to assume the Confidence to appear in my Presence as thou tenderest thy Life and Safety. Having said thus, in a chafing Rage, he left me, taking his Walk into the Cloisters of the Temple.

Now, Madam, continued he, suffer me too late, and in some fort to express how the scope of my Mi fortunes received their main Original. Hitherto I only brought sewels my Father set it on fire, and by his passionate rashness occasioned the mournful Tragedy of this ensuing Story, which I sear will force Tears from your fair Eyes. For as from small Spark a great and surious slame will arise, so from excess of Passion proceeds uncommon Causes, and strange Effects: For if Nature derogated

rom

b

in

h

re

th

th

int

fic

de

T

tho

to

jur

the

Ene

thei

obe

have been

priz

ger.

nate

being

h

er

nd

us

4F-

ner

bes

be-

ba-

eaft

un-

ons

ord.

yes

on,

tch,

eing

that

thee

te to ce as z faid

g his

e too

fcope

rigi-

ather

thness

s from park a

from Causes, rogated from from its usual Course, no wonder then it degenerate, and bring forth Monsters. Unhappy is that Man where Passion reigns supream, it is destructive to himself and others. . The Mind is Subject to many Passions, but this most hateful: 'I is like the fern feed, that Men tays. buds, bloffoms, ripens, and fhatters all within an Hour, for what Anger invents, Passions puts into immediate Execution. So Alexander New his dear friend, for whom afterwards he bitterly repented: And so a Father had almost become the Murderer of his own Son. Any thing in the use becomes a second Nature; so doth Pasfion when it gains precedency. How hard and intricate was the Way I had to go, and how difficult the Choice I had to make! Both feemed deadly, and therefore either of them fearful. 'Tis a great over fight in Parents by their Authority to procure their Childrens Ruin, when to obey them they'll inforce them to prove Perjur'd to the Deities; and fo by making them their Friends, make the Hoft of Heaven their Enemies; and by giving them Content, become their own Disturbers; But sure the fault of difobeying Parents in things of this Nature might have been excuseable, and there might not have been so much Difficulty in the Choice if I had priz'd Eternal Happiness above a Moments Anger. But alas, who can retreat that is predeftinated to Destruction?

Age should be a Pattern to Youth to walk by, Reason should be its Guide; that Reason being refined by Experince, should be a Helm to direct wild wandering Youth; for Paffion is peculiar to Youth, fo should Wisdom and Gravity be to Age. Let all Men shun Anger and Paffion as they would fhun a Serpent that would devour'em: It never brings no content, but always begets new Aggravations of ' Folly; 'twill difturb their whole Body and Frame, afleep or awake; indeed it will. To e give you a fmall Description of Passion, and what it represents, 'tis like a dry Pitchy · Matter, which as foon as fir'd grows into a Flame. Like a Boisterous Tempest to the · Mariner, or like an Arrow let fly from the incens'd Enemy. He which entertains Paffions, make much of his own Destruction when his Passion becomes his Master; and what was only entertain'd as a Gueff, begins to take a free Possession; then he becomes like an un-· skilful Conjurer, that having rais'd a Spirit, knows not how to lay it again without Daneger, so passionate Men perform that in Fury and Rashness which they wish undone when Reason takes Place; repenting of what they have perform'd out of Passion, and cannot remedy or amend at leifure.

But to leave off this Discourse, in which I fear I have detained you too long, I'll go forward with my Story. Understand then, my Father was no sooner parted and gone away, but poor Artemesia received a check from her Parents and Kindred, for her too much Diligence and Care in preserving me, who did slight and neglect her; and that it rather pertain'd to my Friends to have interceeded, and diverted the Blow, than heriels.

My

mp

Intr

caft

Fatl

plea

he .

dieno

Fath

with

ike 1

orri

o jus

our l udgn

recec

nd al nust r

han th

hy O

Counci

erfwa vilful

ience

Man

in the ather's

curely,

it dange

is stir.

d impo

repel

by my

So

My Mother, with all my Relations came and importuned me not to continue so obstinate, with Intreaties and Perswessions, urging the danger I cast myself into, by bringing on my Head my Father's Displeasure and Curie. Then to compleat and finish what they had begun, they bring the Priest, who begins me this Discourse.

f

d

0

d

y

a

ne

ne

15,

is

as

a

n.

it,

ın-

iry

ien

ney

re-

fear

ard

ther

2000

and

Care

glect

than

My

Son, faid he, the Romans did punish disobedience in their Children with Death; so your Father had almost committed a Tragedy on you with his own Hands. Obstinacy in a Child is ike Rebellion in a Subject, which always founds forrid and notorious, let the Occasion be never o just, I will not now debate the justness of our Contract with the fecond Lady, but in my udgment the first with Artemesia should have recedency; being acknowledged by your felf, nd allowed by your Parents, and therefore hust needs be of greater Force and Authority han the latter. In faying this I have given you by Opinion; but now I will give you my council: I must agree with your Friends to erswade you that you would not continue so ilful in your Determination, but yield Obeience to your Father's Will. Confider, when Man is inraged what he is liable to perform in this dreadful Example. Cease then any ther Provocations, and comply with your ather's defires; fince that way you may walk curely, when the other cannot be done withitdanger; and doubt not but I will pacify all is stir. I would have replyed, but so many d importune me that I had not time to answer repel their Temptings, but being vanquishby my Mothers Tears, I agreed to undo myf to humour them.

I was hitherto miserable, but I was more wretched in being belov'd by Artemesia, if her Love and Assection had not been so great there might have been Hopes that my coldness might have begot an Aversion in her towards me. But like a Merchant o'ercharg'd with Debt, when he begins to fall, all things agree to ruin him; so that he only knows them to be wretched, and then from whom he hopes and expects for Relief, most times conspire and agree to his Ruin. And as the Persians adore the rising Sun, and curse it again e'er the Day be half spent; so Fortune seems to court the Man that slourishes in Prosperity and scornfully neglects him when he falls into Adversity.

This was the last Blow, and I utterly undene. For upon Notice of my Consent, my Father returned with Artemesia and the Earl of Palermo her Father, where in the midft of a great throng of People, which this disturbance had brought together, the Priest joined our Hands, the usual Ceremonies were perform'd with great State, which being once ended, I was attended by my Friends, with a very great Company, to my Father's House, where with Revels, Musick, Making, Dancing and Feafting, they passed away the Residue of that Day; and the Night approach'd when my Father, with the Earl of Palermo con ducted us to our Lodging, where they left us,a they imagined, to make a new Banquet of Plea fures. But they were no fooner departed out of the Chamber, taking her by the Hand, Madam faid I this Body you have so vertuously preserved is but a poor Recompence in Confideration of the danger you underwent for my fake, and I fear you make temesti ly Be

W

ar

T

U

en

the

TI

ani

fak

tic

in

OW

to p

to c

difc

Dif

fo to

not

frain

thei

Lov

her

to m

Nig

had

in liv

no of

O enfui

F

dagge

ore

her

here

ight

But

hen

im;

and

elief.

And

curse

rtune

Pro-

done.

er re-

lermo

rong

ought ufual

State,

y my

ny Fa-Mask-

ay the oach'd

20 COI

t us,as

out a

Iadam,

ferved

of the

ear you

WI

will soon grow weary of what so lately you had an Esteem for, since I am become a Burthen and Torment to myself, and by consequence in the Use may prove so to you. O Artemesia! Thou enjoyest this wretched and miserable Part of me, the sody, when my Soul is bestowed essewhere: Thou hast only the Shadow of what I am, when another enjoys the Substance. How for your sake only could I wish Love were no Mathematick Point, but would admit of Diversion; that in some fort I might quit the Obligation that I owe you! O cruel Parents! You are too kind to procure my Discontent, and give no Medicine to dissipate it.

Poor Artemesia stood dissolv'd in Tears at my discourse, and although the Circumstance of my Disasters made my Missortunes become an Use, so to grow sens less of my Sorrows, yet I could not continue insensible of her Mi'eries, nor restrain participating in them, Griefs which had their Original from me; and altho' I could not Love, yet I could be piciful: So that classing her in my Arms, often times kissing her; Come to my Bed, my Love (said I) and let see if the Night can yield us as great Felicities as the Day had begotten us Miseries.

Oh, how I was wreck'd by my Conscence that ensuing Night, which presented my Ingratitude in lively Colours! The Day approach'd, but to no other end but to renew my Miseries; and make my Persidiousness seem the greater, Artemesia with her kind and sweet speeches and lovely Behaviour did endeavour to divert these melancholy Discontents: And this seemed another dagger to pierce my Breast, since I could make no return for such a Mine of Love. However, I carried

and

fhou

mor

cour

fter,

down

migl

Folly

noth

ranif

way 1

pood

Har

yours

hat o

ny Cl

ny b diouf

et let

ou die

I fen

hom

idelity hich

nd of t

omfort

our S rief ,a eal our lan, wh

is story

with h arden g

faw D

If, Aw

Duft.

ried myself to the Eyes of all Beholders, contrary to my usual Behaviour; yet to my Wise I would give no occasion to despair, lest she might find the Calamities she had fallen into too soon.

Two Days had pass'd away since my Marriage with Artemisia and the 3d approach'd, wherein I had given my faith to marry Desdemona, the remembrance wrought so strong on my Assections that I intended to write and excuse myself, less she might think by my neglect, I performed that willingly, that I was enforced to do by necessity: So that taking Pen and Ink I wrote as followeth.

Almerin to Desdemona.

My dearest Joy.

TF Necessity might be permitted to plead my excufe I might hope for a pardon; but I know myself too much a Criminal to plead not Guilty. I am condemn'd already, before Sentence is pronounc'd by your fair felf; and I find my faults too notorious to find a Reprieve: Yet should you confider my cause judiciously you would pity where you would not forgive. To hold you no longer in suspence, I must relate what indeed you least expect to hear; which when known you will wish it had been still kept a fecret. My dearest Love I am married; and that Word will acquaint thee I am wedded to my own Ruin. I will not go about to diminish or lessen my fault, tho' I might plead some Excuse, but I will rather accuse myself, and aggravate my Crime; for of two Evils the last is to be chosen, and I have chosen the greatest: I have wilfully fought my own Destruction when I might have shunned: And who will pity a Spendthrift that willingly makes himself a Bankrupt? I ought to have been constant to thee

n-

eI

ht

on.

ein

the

ons

left

ned

ne-

e as ex-

now

uil-

ence

my

nould vould

hold

what when a fed that to my rish or

xcuse,

ravate

to be

I have

hen I pity a felf a

to thee

and

and fronted my Fathers utmost Displeasure, nor should Anger, Loss of Estate, or that which is more precious, Life itself, have induced me to court my Ruin. But like an unskilful Gamefter, that has lost his Estate at one Cast fits down and repents of that which his Wisdom might have prevented; so I repent of my own Folly, and lament what is irrecoverable. I have nothing to do but to despair, for all happiness is vanished as to me and my future Joys are fled away with my Hopes. There is not the dearest good on Earth I would entertain or welcome for Happiness now I have lost the Felicity of being ours fince all other Happiness is summ'd up in hat one. My Folly has been my torments, and ny Chattisement shall be equal to my Folly. But by bift love, feeing my Ingratitude and Perdiousness is such that I can't expect forgiveness, et let me carry this Comfort to my Grave, that ou did not hate me, and I shall rest quiet in the Duft.

I fent this Letter by one that did attend me, of hom I had often made Trial of his Secrecy and idelity; to whom I reveal'd all the particulars hich had happen'd to Desdemona and myself, nd of the continuance of our Loves. It is some omfort in our Miseries when we have a partner our Sorrows, one that will participate in our rief, and to whom with confidence we may real our closest Secrets. Such an one was this lan, whose Name ought not to be concealed to is story, Fidelio was his name, and it well fuitwith his Nature. I gave him directions to the arden gate, with a charge to remain there till law Desdemona enter; with a description of Person, and an excuse in his Mouth in my be-If Away he went to execute what I had commanded

D 2

Per

F

Co

ifera

ne to

lab

atitu

hich

ot ha

our o

ccufa

o fu

alam

ee i

ade

migl

nger

ope ef

etravi

uering

n be ow too

torm i nd abo

ecome

at pai

ainst you

g, and the I

urthen

nhappy elity ar

eit and

manded him, whilst I with an earnest Exped tion waited his Return. The Day began to gm aged, and Night with her fable Mantle beg to appear, when like a careful Watchman and to Centinel I expected to be relieved. Fid long expected, at last, carefully returned : It fooner faw him, but I endeavoured to reading Deftiny in his Looks; but I beheld there aft Omen to attend me. Yet with an earnest l fire, accompanied with many timorous and for picious Apprehenfions, I thus be poke him. Fide doth thou intend to make me linger away in E pectation and Silence with that which being vealed will kill as foon as known? What is De d mona's Sentence; be it Happiness or Mise lov or Sorrow, Life or Death, nothing can bitter or harsh what she commands, but I h be all Obedience; like all Men I am loth to pect where I love, yet it is not without Pain expect your Answer. I am earnest you show reveal what perhaps I would not know; ye would fain know the worst, that I might be fre from the fear of worfe to come.

He returned me no Answer, but drawing Letter from his Bosom, Sir, (said she) here that will give a better Account of your form than myself; peruse that; after which I give you a Relation of all the particular signess that have happened and fallen out intermall Time of Absence.

I had no leifure for a Reply, but taking Letter, I haitily opened it, and carefully these Lines, which while I live I shall retain keep in my Memory.

Desdemo

Desdemona to Almerin.

Perfidious MAN.

x ped

to gro bega

end tr

Fidl

: 11

easin

F I had priz'd my own Felicity before your. Content, I had been as happy as I am now iserable. It grieves me more than my Misforne to see one whom I did esteem as dear as myere af le, become spotted with that heinous Sin of inest b ratitude, to Triumph in the Ruins of a Maid and so hich did but prize you above her Life. I should Fide ot have believed it but I fee it confirmed by y in hour own Hand, that your infidelity, and your eings ccusations of yourself a Salve for my Misery? it is De to such Medicine cure me, reither will such Miles alam repair the Wounds of my Honour: Bo he gran ee violated by yourself but you have now t I hade yourself incapable of such a Restitution n to a might perfe the Cure; the Remedy is as Pain angerous as the Disease; and both are become us show opens of a Cure. I could accuse you for be for using and overcoming Difficulties, but there m be none in expecting impossibilities. It is now too late to excaim against you, because the torm is already sallen; so that is past your skill Form ad above your Art to divert it. Your being ch In ecome your own Accuser hath quitted me of ular hat pain; and the Evidence you have given aat int ainst yourself has sav'd me the Labour of conthing you, but will not quit me of complain-king g, and calling you Pitiless? Cruel to yourself, ally the Misfortunes of this innocent Babe, the etains withen of my Womb; and ptiless to me the nhappy Mother. O Almerin! If you studied ?ielity and Constancy, as much as you have Deestand Falshood, I had not been thus mi erable, nor you so wretched as you would make me be lieve you are. You sue for Pardon; it is no hard Matter to have it granted from one that cannot hate you, and in spight of herself must still love you. I wish the Gods would forge the Vows and Invocations you have register with them as willingly as I forgive you: But I fear some heavy Curse and Summons is issued on against you, for your Sacrilegious Violations their Deities, which I pray Heaven to divert If my Blood would make Satisfaction and Attonement for your Crime, I should willingly sa crisice it for your Cflences, that as in my Life so in my Death, I might continue yours more than my own.

Defdemona

These Words, like a Dart, wounded my ver Soul. Her innocent Sweetness made my Inside lity appear more notorious. Fidelio to perfet the grievousness of my Crimes, at my reque related these few Particulars.

Directions I staid at the Garden-gate some time but it was not long before I saw Desdemona enter, and with her Presence, like another sundid dazle the Eyes of the Beholders: Her A tire was negligent and careless, her Countenant seemed to be clouded with a sweet melanchely Sadness, fitly suited to her Thoughts; and the all were shadowed and overcast with a Veil Grief, yet she seemed charming, since it did on ly serve that we might behold her Rersections a nearer distance, and her Virtues more apparer and plain. So we may face the Sun when he clouded, which in a late Day we dare not as pro wou her row

God on Hairing

This

Ansibefor was Son

Wor had posse on a fes

lovel and Place quire giver the when

into

proac

ne be.

is no

e that muf

forge

ifter'

But I

ed ou

tion o

livert.

d At

gly fa

Life

20074 nfide

erfee

eque

er an

time

a en

Sun

er A

mano

chol

d the eil (

J 01

ons

aren

he i

roac

proach with our Eyes. Such was her Grief it would make one in Love with Sadness; and such her Gesture it would make one welcome Sorrow.

Ravish'd with this Apparition I knocked at the Gate; which I had scarce done, but like a Goddess she appeared, and fix'd her Eyes upon my Face, perhaps presaging me to be some Harbenger of ill News; but quickly recollecting herself, Sir, (said she) Are you not mistaken, have you any Business with any Person here? This is no common Way, and it gives me some cause of Wonder how you came here.

Charmed with her Speeches, I returned this Answer, Madam, it was not a Mistake that brought me hither, nor by Chance that I appear before you, but expresty and on purpose. 1 was fent unto you by Almerin the Governor's Son of Syracuse with this Letter, with a Charge to deliver it into your own Hands. With the Words I delivered her your Letter; which I had no fooner done, but I perceived fhe was possessed with an unusual and strange Agitation and Emotion of Spirit; sometimes the Rofes of her Cheeks were overcast with a lovely Red, and suddenly they vanished and gave Way to the Lillies to possess their Places. She kiss'd the Letter, and earnestly enquired of your Health, to which when I had given her an answer, she intreated me to walk into the Garden; and fo shutting the Door, he retired herfelf into a private Harbour where opening the Letter, she began to read it over, whilft I feated myfelf to behold her.

When on a sudden all the former Signs of Toy vanish'd and were dispers'd, her Visage was overcast with a fatal Disturbance, her Breast began to pant, and a Shower of Tears began to fall from her fair Eyes, which hung on her Cheeks like pearly Dew on a sweet-smelling Rose: Such were her Actions that they would have induced the wild Satyrs and herce Beafts to pity: It is not often I weep, but I could not refrain myself from Tears, nor can I quit the remembrance now, but with a mortal fadness. She shew'd nothing of Rathness in her Carriage, as inventing he complains or means but mildly and fweetly clofing up all in her own Breaft, till that Closet grew too little, and the Vessels too fmall to contain her Grief.

I beheld this alteration with a grievous Tronble, when in a Moment she began to be grievous pale; her Eyes which did shine like two Stars began to grow dull. In sine her Spirits being over-charged with Sorrow, and weary of so great a Burthen forsook her; so that letting your Letter fall out of her Hands, imperfectly pronouncing these Words, Ab me, She fell into a deadly Trance, without any Motion or hopes of Life: I ran hastily to catch her before she fell, but came too late; so that falling she had seated herself on a Bed of Violets, which seemed to close and hang down their Heads at this satal Missortune.

Then it was I curst you for your Perfidionsness to so sweet a Creature. Heaven only knows the extreams of Grief I then endured; I could not go out of the Garden, and leave her in that forlorn Condition, yet to stay was pemy fafe that taki on l Arming Hearetur to lee rilo

I pe whice me to in the I sup Lette

Duty

fealinhim for m
in the tende
I left

wrote

The tinued course he had to be from duce

rilous

was

reaft

egan

her

lling

ould

ts to

t re-

re-

She

, as

and till

too

rou-

ev-

WO

rits

y of

ing

Aly

nto

pes

she had ich

s at nf-

nly

f ner

pe-

rilous to my Life: But in a small Consultation my Pity overcame my fear, and the care of her fafety, the Thoughts of my own Security: So that running to a Fountain in the Garden, and taking cold Water in my Hand, I sprinkled it on her Face; and taking her lovely Body in my Arms I lofely began to bow her . So that opening her fair Eyes, and fending two or three Heart breaking Sighs, as a Token of her Soul's return to her Body, which was loth, as it feem'd, to leave fo fair a Habitation. When her Senfes began to execute their proper Function and Duty, casting her Eyes on me, and taking notice that I had her in my Arms; Sir, (faia fbe) I perceive I have been a Trouble to you, for which I ask your Pardon and intreat you to affift me to yonder House (shewing me a Place situate in the midst of the Garden) so that raising her up I supported her by the Arm; first taking up your Letter, I conducted her to the House, where she wrote the Letter that I now delivered you; and fealing it, gave it me with these Words, tell him I wish him much Happiness and Felicity, for myself tell him I shall hardly find any, but in the Grave. So descending the Stairs, I attended her to the Gate; and so taking my Leave, I left her, bewailing your ingratitude.

Thus Fidelia ended his discourse, and continued silent, making the Epilogue of his Discourse a melancholy Representation of the Story he had related, and confirming what he had said to be nothing but Verity. I could not retain from participating with him, since it could produce so much Pity in a Stranger's Breast that but a few Hours before had but only feen her: without my Breast had been Marble it must melt into Compassion at his Rehearfal. I could do no less than hate myself fince she continu'd still to love me; making my Faults more odious, for all my Perjury and Infidelity betraying and abufing fo much Innocence, Defdemona fends me Word she loves me still, and shall do so in Death, she forgives me too more than I can for. give myfelf: Yet this was the fame Dejdemma. whose Goodness and Kindness I so much abused. Her harmless Innocence began to set a higher Price on her Virtues in my Soul than formerly I had for her Beauties: I began to know the Worth of the Treasure I had forgone, and found the Value to furmount all Esteem.

D 5

Dut

Now all my Thoughts and Desires became wholly engag'd, to make my Endeavours suitable to my Mind, which made it its whole Business, in some fort, to tender an ample Satisfaction, in Recompence of the Injuries I had occasioned her; but I found my Desires were all fruitless, and that my best Performances would be of no Value, while Astemesia remain'd as an Obstacle to obstruct my intentions. 'I was here the Agents of Hell sollicited and assisted me in this Tragical Design, so that her Death was concluded in a Moment, nothing remain'd but the Means how to effect it.

ed pr

. 1

· h

. 11

it Co

that be a com their

ing Reel

began taking one th mine:

began.
bring it

form.
both to so great depend.

by

When a Man is once made the Scope of the Miseries of Fortune, he only knows then what it is to be unhappy: So when a Man begins to be bad, he only knows then how to become more wicked. What at first seems Horrid.

elt

do

liff

for

bu-

me

in

or-

na,

led.

her

y I

the

and

ame

ita-

usi-

icli-

cca-

all

bluc

s an

nere

e in

was

but

the

s to

ome

rrid, by

by Custom becomes an Use, and Use does metamorphose it into a Second Nature, else could I have so soon consented to add Murther to my Perjury? As if one Sin would expiate and make Satisfaction for another Crime; not having Patience to go by degrees, but I must run all speed to my Ruin. One Sin doth feldom go unaccompany'd alone, but is attended by a great Evil. By Nature we are too prone, forward and eager, to be wicked much more when we make it a Habit. I should have weaned myself from it in time, before it had procured my utter Destruction and 'Confusion; but I find too late I commiserate my own Folly, and complain of the faults I might have prevented. So that all the Benefit that proceeds from that lamentable Story, will be a caution and a Warning to the Ages to come, that by my Harms they may prevent their own Destiny; and carefully taking warning by my Disaster, they may wisely shun the 'Reel, whereon I was shipwreck'd.

As formerly I was black with Perjury; now I began to Plot how to be Red with Murther, in taking away the innocent and guiltless Life of one that not five Days before had preserved mine: But Reason and Consideration were banked them, no Thoughts remained but how to accomplish and finish what I had so barbarously began. I had thought of many Ways how to bring it about: First I thought to have strangled her in Bed, but that seemed dangerous to perform. Poyson at last I resolved on. I was both to trust any one with a Secret of so great a Consequence, whereon my Life did sepend. So that I went myself to an Apothecary in the City, of whom for some few Crowns I purchased the satal Potion; and enjoying him to Secreey, I went to perform my satal Resolution.

Being come to my Father's boufe I found poor Artemesia indisposed in her Bed, and going to wifit her in her Chamber, I fat down by the Bedfide, where cafting her Arms about my Neck, and bestowing many a sweet Kiss on me, with Endearments so obliging, that if Hell had not conspired ber Ruin, sure it would have turn'd the Current of my barbarous Design. Much Discourse passed till she did desire to take a little reft, so kiffing her, I left her to her Repose; but taking Notice of a Posset that was preparing on the Fire, the Maid being busy about ber Mistress, like a Fiend of Hell, I hastily and unjeen emptied the Poison into it, and so departed away undifery'd. About half an Hour after this invenomed Drink was administred unto her, which spreading itself by degrees into all Parts of her vital Spirits, with its Force foon made a separation betwixt the Soul and the Bo: dy, and left only her Breathless Corpse on the Bed.

This sudden Rumour of her more sudden Beath begat an Admiration to whom it was related. Accompany'd with my Father and Mother I went to see her liveless Trunk, not without Tears in my Eyes, but I cannot safely say whether it was in Deceit, the better to cover and put a Mask on my Villany, or the weeful Object presented to my Eyes; but for one, or either or both together, many signs of Sorrow I made. Mean while Messengers were sent to my Father in Law, the Earl of Palermo, with the

the the nur mil but or prece

he

T

bute Coff Con tials nied forro in B rived mitter of the not be Crime poor A ons the Days f betwixt L Hours: to the gins t like a Luftre

of D

heavy

im

fo-

oor

to

the

ck.

rith

on-

the

Dif-

ttle

ofe;

bre-

bout

fily

id fo

lour

un-

o all foon

Bo:

the

dden

s re-

hout

whe-

and Ob-

ow I n the

eavy

heavy tydings of his Daughters untimely death. They arriv'd at the House about the evening, but the Lamentations and Moans they made over the untimely Hearfe of their dear Child were numberless. They were not without doubts and miltrusts about the sudden occasion of her Death. but having no Light whereon they might build or ground a Suspicion, it vanish'd as soon as it receiv'd Birth. After Nature had paid her tribute in Parental Tears, her Body was carefully Coffin'd up, and about two Days after, the same Company that attended me in my Bridal Nuptials in State and Triumph, this Day accompanied the Corpse of poor Artemsfia; and her forrowful and disconsolate Parents, all cloathed in Black, as best fuiting and agreeing with the mournful Object they attended. At last we arrived at the Temple, where the Body was committed to the Earth, after the usual Ceremonies of the Dead were celebrated. And here I cannot be filent, although I shall aggravate my own Crimes.

When I confider and meditate on the frailty of poor Mortals, and the Vicissitudes and Alterations they are subject unto. Here was but a seven Days space between aMarriageBed and aGrave, betwixt Joy and Sorrow, and a smaller time betwixt Life and Death; but in the space of a sew Hours a Man becomes no Man. Man returns to the Dust. He comes forth like a pleasant Flower, and is soon pluck'd by the Hand of Death: If he continue, he soon begins to wither of himself; and Age and Time like a tedious Winter, soon nips away his Lustre.

Madam,

Madam, faid Almerin, proceeding forward in his discourse, and fixing his Eyes on Cynthia, no doubt but you wonder to fee me interlace in this my mournful Story fo many various Accidents of Change and Fortune, of the frailty of Life, and uncertain Certainty of Death; but thefe are the only Balfams that fweetens my Misfortunes, and the Antidotes that expel the Venom. For thus in comparing time present with the time that is past, I find there is no. thing done now but hath been done before us, So that it is some comfort to have so many illu-Brious Personages, Fellows in our Missortunes, Like a Man that hath many dangerous Wounds, the greater difficates the Pain of the leffer, and the Torments of the one makes the Ruins of the other become familiar. This, Madam, is my Defign, to make you acquainted with Death himself, that the latter part of my Story may feems less horrid unto you, and in some fort to fweeten your Resentments, if you should conceive any to my Difadvantage by the relation of this Story.

But to keep you no longer in suspence I shall proceed. After Artemesia was interr'd in her Grave, the Earl of Palermo with his Lady came home to my Father's House, where they remain'd, bewailing the Death of their dear Child about three Days time; after that was expired they departed their Journey for their own home With a seigned and hypocritical Sorrow, I offered my Service to wait and attend them: But if seems being unwilling to be obliged to one that they did suspect (as afterwards they said) of their Daughter's Death, with much Thankful ness and Civility dismissed, and had me Farewel

Fou

tem

ren

ing,

fwe

only

Gar

Fair

Steed

bega

of N

ing S

Pleaf

thoug

feem !

Minu

pected

with t

fuade 1

ploy'd

the C

the Ga

Place v

it was a

arrived

Clear,

any in 1

rived, bu

mering :

beautifu!

wan, dro

which f

at on th

vard

bia,

e in Acci-

y of

but

the

fent no-

e us.

illu-

ines,

inds,

and

f the

my

eath

may

rt to

con-

on of fhall

n her

came

y re-

Child

pired

ome

fered

dut il

that

) 0

kful

Fou

Four Days had passed since the Burial of Artemesia, and two since the Departure of her Parents, when to pass away the Summer's Evening, and to refresh my drooping Spirits with the sweet Air and pleasant Shades, I retired myself, only accompanied with Fidelio, into the same Garden, wherein I was sirst surprised with my Fair Desdemona.

Phæbus now hastened to bathe his sweltry Steeds in the foaming Ocean, and his Sifter Luna began to appear, so to expel the usurping Shades of Night, when being comforted by the refreshing Sweetness of her cold Influences, so that the Pleasures I then enjoy'd, accompany'd with the thoughts of enjoying Desdemona, made the time feem short in the Contemplation, and the Hours Minutes in the Imagination, so that the unexpeded Hour of ten arriv'd. Fidelio's Intreaties with the lateness of the Evening, could not perfuade my Return as yet, my Mind being employ'd on other Thoughts more agreeable, after the Clock had struck eleven I intended to leave the Garden, but first resolving to visit the harpy Place where I first rescued my dear Desdemona, it was almost upon the stroke of Twelve e'er I arrived there! The Night continued fair and Clear, and this was the most private retiring of any in the Garden; where I was no fooner arrived, but to my Amazement, behold by the glimmering and feeble Light of the Moon I saw a bantiful Woman, her Countenance was pale and wan, dropping pearly Tears from her fair Eyes, which she wiped off with a Hankerchief. She on the Ground, leaning her pretty Head on her Fair Hand. She feem'd wholly a Map of forrow; and gave Demonstrations, by her furted Actions that her Gesture could not express the least Torment of her Mind. My Curiofity and Pity persuaded me to leave the Place, to learn the Reason of such uncommon Sorrow. I had no fooner approached before her, being near enough to have spoken unto her, but as one surpriz'd unawares, the hastily takes away her left Hand, that supported her Head, which she had no sooner done, but behold from her Breast issued a Crimfon Gore. My Amazement was greater, when in her Face I beheld the Visage and Features of Desdemona, tho' overshadowed with a Veil of Sorrow. Her Countenance feemed to contend with Grief and Pity, rather than with Wrath and Anger.

Frighted with the Horror of this Sight, I flood metamorphofed, like an Image of Stone, not being able to go forward, or retire backwards, when this woful Object came nearer unto me, fixing her Eyes stedfattly on my Face; after a while, raising her right Hand, laid it on her Wound, which semed all this while to run in a Purple Flood down her Breaft, sprinkling the Grafs where the itcod with fearlet Dye. My Amazement was augmented, when unfixing her Eyes from my Face, she lifted them up towards Heaven with fo pale and m urnful a Posture, as would have produced Pity in the most senseless Breaft This fudden furprizal, accompany'd with my Fears, did cowardice all my Spirits, fo that had not the Confidence nor Courage to open my Mouth to speak to this pitiful Apparition, which once more lifting up her Hand to her Wounds giving me a grievous parting look, the fuddenly vanish' its . liev App and fresh difm were the Effec collec behol mal S comp the H a Sab der an loud a the ho fo beca rzon v whence Rain: rons, fa if the V lowed a der. Th ible, w/ out a W bbe the er Sight oming eeble V Wrete

es dran

Heaven 2

van

11-

ted

the

and

arn

no

ugh

z'd_

ind,

no

fued

eat-

and

with

d to

with it, I

one,

ack-

unta

; af-

n her

in a

the y A.

g her

wards

re, as felels

with

that!

n m

which

unds

denly

nish'

vanish'd out of my Sight. I was amazed after its Departure, and jealous whether I should believe my Eyes or no; or whether this was a real Apparition or a Fiction bought forth by Fancy, and begotien by Imagination, that had left fuch fresh Impressions in my Soul, and figured such dismal Ideas in my Mind. But these Doubts were foon expelled and banished by Reason, and the fucceeding Accidents foon confirmed the Effects to be no Illusions; for before I could refollect and rally together my frighted Spirits, behold from the Thicket hard by me iffued difmal Screeches, horrible and fearful Moans, accompany'd with uncommon and confused voices; the Heavens on a judden covered themselves with a Sable Cover, and the Moon hid her Face under an Eclipse. The Noises became yet more load and terrible, and the refounding Eccho of the horrid Clamour drew nearer and neaver and 6 became more fearful and dreadful. The Horzon was cloath'd with thick dark Clouds, from whence proceeded a flormy Shower of Hail and Rain; the Wind grew Tempestuous and Boisteross, fearful Flashes of Lightning proceeded as fthe Woods had been on Fire, after which followed and enfued loud and fearful Clapsof thuntr. The Storm increas'd, and became more horble, when from the neighbouring thicker rush'd out a Woman, who approaching me, I foon knew obe the dead Artemesia, I would have sled from er Sight, but could not fly my Destiny, when ming yet nearer unto me, with a weak, and teble Voice, the uttered these Words Wretched Man, now the Reward of thy Wickedthe draws near, and thy Punishment is at Hand.

Theyen is ready tolea wother, and the earth is prepared

Prepared to swallow thee, Sentence is pronounc'd against thee, and Messengers prepared to execute it. My innocent Death will not go unrewenged, nor your Perjury unpunished. Go, miserable and wretched Man! Despair: Think of nothing but Horrors, Shrieks, Pains and Torments: Let Content and felicity henceforth become Strangers unto thee, and let thy Missortunes become ever worse and worse: Let thy Sleep be short, and disturbed with fearful Visions. The Remainder of your Life shall be a living Death: You shall seek for Death but you shall not find it. This is the Commission I had to unso d to thee from the Higher Powers, which having reveal d I leave

al

G

Gi

hai

her

nou

aga

" W

· SI

on no

mi

an

her

ane

' wa

Sto

· leaf

Dif

Neg

felf

froi

perf

His

me acc

thee to thy fate

This faid, the vanish'd from my Eyes like Lightning; so soon she disappeared to my fight but not to my Thoughts; for the Remembrance was green in the Memory, and the Thought fo fixed in my Soul, that I think the feigned Phantism would hardly yield Precedency to the Real. My Eyes were yet firmly bent toward that Part of the Thicket I faw Artemefia take And Fidelio, which the time of this Tempel had conceal'd and sheltered himself in a Thicke near at Hand, after his Defires and Intreatie became fruitless, in requesting me to retire wit him, when he came unto me, he found me no removed from the same Place where he left m Wondering at this Change, he took me by Arm: Sir, faid he, what occasions these ghast Looks, and fearful timerous Apprehonions You feem as if you had met your Sins or be accosted with your Grandfather's Ghost. Wh causes you thus to bend your Eyes on V cancy, and fix your . Thoughts on Shadow

Where do you let your Imaginations ramble, your Spirits rome, and your fancy runs at random? Sir, Confider where you are, what time of Night it is: Recollect yourself out of these Dumps, and let us repair away from this fatal Place, that has brought you this Disturbance.

His earnest Importunities brought me to myself; and seeing him expect a Reply, Yes Fidelio said I, my Sins have met me sull blown, and Ghosts more Terrible and searful than any Grandfathers. By Heaven, Fidelio! Shadows haunt me. Saw you not my dearest Desdemona here, and deceased Artemesia, who just now pronounced the Sentence of Horror and Damnation against me.

ne'd

cute

ged.

and

but.

ngers

EWET

inder

Shall

his is

m the

leave s like

fight

orance

ght fo

eigned

to the

oward

z take

empel

hicke

treatie

re wit

me no

eft m

by th

ghaft

pfions

or bee

Wh

on V

adow

Whe

Sir, replied he, These Chimeras be nothing but the Delutions of a diffurb'd Brain proceeding from the Strength of Imagination, which forms to itself Wonders which the 'Spectators cannot behold; such no doubt, was 'yours; for I protest and vow to you I heard no Voice, nor did I apprehennd any fuch Similitudes: Artemesia lies quiet in her Grave, and I doubt not but Desdemona is asleep in her Bed; Rest will soon divirt these Illusions, 'and cure this Disquiet: Come, Sir, Let us walk home, the Night grows aged, the late Storm is past, both call on us to be parting, least we should be prevanted by a fecond Difaster; your Parents expects you, and your Necessity requires you that you change yourfelf of your wet Cloaths, which your Absence from your own House will not permit you to perform.

His Reasons followed by his Intreaties made me accord to leave the Garden, and without returning turning my Answer, I straitways accompany'd We foon came to my Fathers, where they all fate up expecting my Return; but they no fooner beheld me in that Condition and ghaftly Distemper, but they stood like People charged with Amazement in their Looks. I was had to my Chamber by Fidelio, and some other Servants, where my Cloaths were taken off, and I betook myself to my Bed; but Oh the Horrors that accompany'd me the latter. Part of this Night were numberles! if afleep, Desdemona presented herself to the Eves of my Soul; tho' my Bodily Eyes were shut, yet suddenly flarting from my Trance, methoughts I faw that Object really, which Fancy formed in my Dreams, fo that fearfully calling out to lidelio, who attended me; 'Oh, Fidelio? Doft thou not fee my dearest Desdemona, the Blood streaming from her Fair Breast, now fanding by my Bedside? Behold, now she is going away out of the Door. Oh flay abused Innocence! And tell me the Reason thou dost visit me in that dismal Posture? Look Fidelis, fhe is gone, run and call her back again; defire her from me to return: By all the Affection that is between us, conjure her not todeny my Request.

Here Fidelio to divert these Thoughts, made me this Discourse. 'Sir, said he, When melancholly reigns predominate over a Man's Spirits, it causes a Disturbance in his Brain, which gives Birth to Thousands of Phan-taffical and Fearful Apprehensions, form'd from what we Fear and Fancy most. Mar ny times in such Extreams Men imagine they meet with Ghosts; others, that be amorous

Persons,

t to

· d

s is

. 0

ci

' do

Val

fo

co:

' Mi

bei

taft

'fwe

mai

· Ifle,

thei

whe

the !

of th

Rock

was a

he ri

Dang

he fa

re.

y

nd

le.

I

ne

en

Oh

ter.

ep,

my

ud-

sI

l in

Fi-

10 3

now

he is

ufed

doft

lelio,

de-

Hec-

deny

made elan-

Spi-

rain,

Phanorm'd

Mar

e they

aorous erfons, Persons, that they court their Mistresses, enjoy ' all the delicious Reception they could wish. and the most obliging Discourse, and sweetest Entertainment pass between them, that they hold themselves the only happy men, yet when they go to embrace the pleasing Apparition, ' they clasp nothing but the brittle Air; the spirit is in continual Motion, and many times takes a Pleasure to deceive the Senses; as for Example, One imagine his dearest Priend is ' dead, that dulls his happiness; another, that 'is very Poor, dreams he possesses a Mine of Gold, this revives his Spirits, as before a difconsolate Lover fancies he enjoys the lovely 'Object of his Desires, this compleats his Feli-'city, while another that's Rich, thinks he is undone by some Casualty; but as the mist doth 'vanish before the Sun in a Summer's Morning, fo do these Phantisms when a Man comes to confult with Reason; it rather increases their 'Misery, and adds to their Felicity; the one being a bitter Potion to make the Happiness tafte the sweeter, and the other a deceitful weet, that makes their Miferies relish more bitter; this Sir, I hope in good Time will be manifested in you, fince we that inhabit this Isle, always take these Illusions and Dreams in their contraries, and apply them accordingly when a better Confideration takes Place; as the Story that is related of a poor Fisherman of this Island, who drying his Nets on a steep Rock, fell afleep, and in his fleep dreamed he was a King, overjoy'd with fo great a Felicity he rifes, and in this Extafy of Spirit fell a Dancing, to comi g near the fide of the Rock he falls down, and ends his Joys in a moment.

It

it is good to take warning by others Harms, not to let the Suggestion of a feigned Apparition ruin the Hopes of a real ; Desdemona remains entirely yours, and may bind her fo by tying that inviolable Knot of Matrimony which you have already fastened by so many Vows; fince Artemefia is dead there is no obstruction can hinder you from giving her Satisfaction, and yourfelf Content. Here Fidelio ended his Discourse, when I embraced him in my Arms, faying, 'Omy Friend! I am willing to believe whatever thou hast related unto me, could it contain · less of Truth; for the only nappiness wretched Men receive is, when pleasantly they de ceive themselves of what they defire. I should wish no greater happiness were Desdemona fill among the Living: I would cease to expect and aspire to any greater Hope if I could once more embrace her in my Arms, and reopole this weary and disturbed Head in her all look Bosom; it would prove a Corrosive to the un this greatest of my Disasters. To-morrow, my anger i Fidelio, I will put thee to the Trouble once to of m · more to deliver me a Letter to Desdemona, as only in the mean time I will endeavour, together with thee, to take a little Rest.

Night had no fooner fled away at Day's ap proach, and the Sun had given notice of his ri fing to adorn the Day, but I left my weary bed to confider how to write fomething wherein might oblige Desdemona to be less offended wit my Infidelity, so that taking Pen, Ink and Paper I wrote to this Effect.

Almer

1

me t

how

Mani

heC:

hen r ive th

leart.

on th

nd wl

light a

are he

d give

end my is Me

I had no

led it u

elio, but

to the

dging th

esdemo my Fea

though

ALMERIN to DESDEMONA.

My dearest HEART,

y

y

ay

no

ner

I

my

ver

tain

tch-

de-

ould

nona

ex-

could

d re-

n her

to the

my

gether

y's ap

hia ri

ry bed nerein

ed wit Paper

O put thee out of Doubt of the Conftancy of my Affections, altho' Necessity compell'd me to an inforced Marriage, yet I know not now to repair the Fault, nor give thee a real Manifestation of my Love, but by destroying heCause that gave us this Disturbance; know hen my Dear, that to enjoy thy Love, and to we three an Example of the Integrity of my leart, I have given my Wife Artemefia a Poon that hath carried her to her long Home; d what rests there now but what I do thee ight and Equity, according to my vows, if you he hermit me to that Priviledge and Felicity, d give new Life to one that daily dies for you. nd my Pardon figned from your fair Mouth by is Messenger, in the Expectation of which I all look to Remain miferable or happy. If you m this Letter, the Thoughts of any future anger is past; for I would not commit the Seonce to of my Life to any but Desdemona, fince it emona, as only the alone that can dispose of

ALMERIN.

had no fooner ended my Letter, and fairly ed it up with an Intention to deliver it to ilio, but I can't tell what horrid fate prompts to the contrary, to go myself in Person, iging that my Presence would procure more Desdemona's Breast, than my Letter could; my Fearfulness would seem Guilty: In fine thoughts fled my former Resolutions, I

Almer

had

had scarce ended this Contest in my Spirit, but I heard my Father and Mother coming up to vifit me and inquire of my Health, they no foon er knock'd at my Chamber Door, but haftily taking up my Letter, I put it in my Pocket calling to Fidelio to open the Door; which h had no fooner perform'd, but they gave me the Good-morrow, intimating how much fatisfy they were to fee me in fo different a Temp and Condition from what I was the last Night they fat down, where we had much Discourse too long here to relate. That Day they dine with me in my Chamber, and after many ule Kindnesses, such as Parents confer on the dearest Children, were bestowed on me, the bad me Farewel, and so left me; they were scar out of Sight, but I began to make me ready visit Dejdemona. I went away accompany'd w Fidelio, towards her Father's House, but we h no foor er, with our hasty Steps, lessened the w and distance which separated us, but behold, faw a Coffin cover'd with black, adorned wit Garlend of dainty Flowers laid on the top, Hearfe was supported and carried by four you Men, and fix beautiful Maidens accompany them, each holding a part of the Hearfeeld wherein they did intimate and filently freak th willingness to do something obliging, it be the last Service they could perform to the B of this poor departed Virgin; the Company all covered with a Sable Black, their Pace if and flow, bent towards the Great Temple of City. This Sight began to freeze and chill warm Blood; and that which gave suspicio my Fears was, because I saw them come of Phila

d I low id war ion om

bill

I had of maded y'd of nd had eclar

he Ho fle to d with aid m ome in een 'en ne a p nany 'I to fee charge after Body Sorrow

her Br

vide he Sorrow

preffior

t, but

upto

foon-

haftily

ocket

ich h

me th

atisfy'

emp

Night

ccurle

y dine

y uso

n the

e, the ready

y'd wi

web

the w

hold,

d wit

top,

ur you

mpan

rfeclo

eak th

it be the B

any n

acesi

ple of

chill

fpicio

me or

Phila

hilaster's House; to confirm me that I was not an Error, I saw the Corpse followed by the d Knight and his Lady, who bedew'd his ow-white Beard with Tears, which his Lady d water her aged Cheeks with the same Liour; both paid the Tribute, exceeding the Cuom Men usually pay to Nature: their Tears, ountenance and Actions were suitable, did care them to be in the Bitterness of Sorrow, nd plung'd in the Depth of Woe.

I had accompanied them to the Temple, had of my earnest defire I had to be resolv'd of the wift, prompted me to the contrary, and peraded me to go to the House to be truly fatisd of my Fears. We soon came to the Door, ad having knock'd, were met by a servant of he House, who did know me fince I did first to frequent the House; and being acquaintwith the Respect his Lord and Lady usually aid me when I met thither, requetted me to ome in; where being entered I asked for the It and his Lady, not taking Notice that I had en'em, also for Desdemona; to which he gave ne a pitious Look, letting drop from his Eyes pany Tears. 'Sir, faid he, you come in a time to see us buried in Woe, and to behold us overcharged with Sorrow; for about 4 days ago, after my Mistress Desdemona had pined her bdy with an inward Grief, and given to Sorrow the full Reins and whole Possession in her Breast, she kept the Occasion so secret that her indulgent Parents knew not how to provide her a Remedy, or to apply a Comfort; Sorrow was painted in her Looks in so lovely 1 Character, and Grief had so sweet an Impression there, that it would persuade Sadness

E

griev

by be

rowi

he K

pent

mitti

eaft

ccon

emn

and co

he V

Reafo

here,

and is

Ha

ment,

Garde

this T ie ret

we foi

where

Breath

l can

House.

robbed

proved

Appari

fresh in

themse

Conscie

mg of

r bluct

Tears

in the most mirthful jocund Beholders. She would tell so many pretty Stories of Love, and of the Unconstancy of Men, and pronounce them with so sweet, yet so mournful an Action and Accent of Voice and Gesture, that she never enced but she left the Auditors with Tears in their Eyes.

This Day is five Days fince, when her Spirit being overcome with Grief, and her Senses overcharged with Melancholly, she fell into Despair and walking out as if she would recreate hersel in the Garden, she retires herself into a Hous of Pleasure, there privately situated, where imitating the Roman Dame Lucretia, with a sate Dagger she wounds herself to the Heart.

She was foon miss'd by her Parents, but bein feen by the Servants to walk into the Garden the was foon followed]; but after they had fearch every private Walk and Alley in the Garden and fought for her in every Thicket and shad Grove, and we could receive no Tidings, one the Servants bethinks him elf and runs hastil up to his House, where the first Object heca his Eyes on was this Spectacle of Pity; he ru down again amazed, making a lamentable Cr faying, Oh Sirs! Desdemona hath slain herse in the Garden House, and yet retains the blood Weapon in her Hand; which was no foon heard, but they all began to bemoan her with loud and grievous Noise, which was soon over heard by her Parents, but before they came! was dead, no fooner was her Breath depart out of her Body but she was convey'd in, a Surgeons fent for to embalm her Body, wh her Parents went a-new to lament utter griev

She

and

Dunce

Etion

never ars in pirit

over

fpair

herfel

Hou

re imi

a fata

bein:

arden

earch'

arder

1 shad

one (

haftil

he ca

he ru

ole Cr

herse

blood

foon

r with

on ove

ame

depart

l in, a

y, wh

utteri

grieve

prievous Exclamations against the Person, which had been the original Cause of their Sorrows, by being the author of the Death of their child, rowing a severe Revenge if ever they came to the Knowledge of the Author; thus they have pent the Day and Night in Sorrow, not admitting one Minute's rest in permitting the east Cessation of their Griefs, till this Day accompanied with all their Friends, in a some manner they person their Obsequies and convey her Body to the Temple, to set in the Vault of her Ancestors. This, Sir, is the Reason they are now from Home, and not here, to give you such Entertainments as besits and is due to his Worthiness.

Having ended his Discourse to my Amazement, I defired he would conduct me into the Garden, to the Place where Desdemona acted his Tragick Scene and Catastrophe of her Life; te returned me no answer, but leading the Way, we followed him till he brought us to the Place where so unfortunately she yielded up her last Breath; here my Amazement was above what I can express when I saw this was the same House, where so safely I first deceived and pobled Desdemona of that sewel which had proved the main cause of her Death; now the Apparition I faw the last night came bleeding field in my Memory, all my Crimes presented themselves in their own Colours; for which my Conscience bids me expect no other but a fulfilof murthered Artemesia Sentence; here I puld not refrain from letting fall a Flood of lears to the Remembrance of one who once E 2

I loved to near; when we left the Room, and begun to make a turn or two in the Alleys, where the Memory of Dejdemona begat new Griefs in my Soul, and fresh Sluices from my Eyes; and fearing the Servants might gather fome Sufpicion from my too deep Concernments, I diewout my Handkerchief to wipe away those rebellious Tears I could not restrain; and not being willing any longer to remain in fo doleful Place, I took my Farewel of the Servant, defiring him to tell his Master I would wait on him some other Time when his Sorrow would better admit of a Visit, so I left the House in such an ill Composure of Pody, and Disturbance of Spirit, as ever tormented a poor afflicted Soul! At this time I had given a Period to my Life, had I not been restrained by Fidelio, who by Intreaties defired me to preserve my Life, yet could give me no Comforts or Reasons why I should prolong it, unless it were to add to my Miseries.

When we were come Home, I betook me to my Chamber, casting myself on the Bed: 'And to what End, Fidelio, (said I) should I secure this miserable part of Life that remains, Deserting that sees her so much approve of it? Why shall I stay behind, Fidelio? Let me go and ask her Pardon, and seek in the blessed shades Now Fidelio, what thinkess thou? Where the Apparitions real and seigned I did behold, a Illusions or Fancies, as thou wouldst make me believe? Now Experience and Reason tells me it was the lovely Ghosts of my dearest Deserting.

'I wona, which came to accuse me of Perjury.' Oh miserable Man! wretched Life! Whe wilt thou have an End?

No

Juff

jury

for

out,

but

vens

Inqu

Rev

out t

there

that Nigl

tals botto

them

void

they will l

Fo

denly

ed wit

open,

being

by wh

turned they h

the O

Wife

no, fu

picion

the A mona,

kt. of

Crime

and

vhere

efs in

and

fpici-

w out

llious

wil-

Place,

g him

me o-

admit

an ill

pirit,

t this

had I

reaties

d give

pro-

ies. me to

· And

fecure

, Def

Death

Wh

ro and

rades

ere th

old, o

ke m ells m

De/de

rjury

Whe

No

Now I began to grow an Object of Heaven's Inflice; I was defiled with Murther and Perjury; the first called for a speedy Revenge; for the other Sins only speak, Murder shrieks out, the Element of Water moistens the Earth, but Blood flies upwards and bedews the Heavens, which makes ftrict Figuiry, and fevere Inquifition for Blood, and triamphs in their Revenges; their curious fearch foon found me out to make me an Example of their Vengeance; there is nothing that is done ne'er so privately that can be hid from their Sight; the darkest Night cannot blind them, nor the craftiest Mortals deceive them; were Sin committed in the bottom of the Ocean, there they would behold them; whether then can a poor Sinner fly to avoid their Justice? If they should fly to Heaven they are there; if to the Vaults below there they will likewise find 'em out.

For as I was reposing myself on my Bed, sudlealy and unexpectedly our house was furrounded with armed Men, my Chamber Doors broke open, my Body feized on, and taken Prisoner; being thus furprized I demanded the Caufe, and by what Authority they did it; to which one returned me this tharp Answer, their Authority hey had from the King, which I must obey, and the Occasion of the Death of your late married Wife of Artemefia, daughter to the Earl of Palerm, supposed to be poisoned by you; with a sufpicion which is conceived of you that you are the Author and Cause of the Death of Desdemora, Daughtet and only Child to an aged It. of this City, call'd Philaster; these are the frimes objecting amainst you, to which you must E 3 answer, answer; in the mean Time you must yield Obe dience to our Power, and immediately go a long with us: This faid they laid Hands of me, and speedily hurried me out of my Cham her to convey me to prison; but we had no fhorten'd half the way between my Father House and the city Goal, but by the Shine of the Moon, we might discern a Troop of Horse and perceive a fmall Company of Foot, which in a void Place of the City began to compa us about, which my Guard no fooner describe but they began to cry out a Rescue, a Rescu but their Voices were foon flop'd by the Horl men which over ran them, and the Foot-me that bravely affaulted them; fo that in a Mi ment I faw my Guard dispersed, my self fre and bravely mounted on a fresh Horse, whi I was wondering and musing at the strangen of this Rescue, I saw one make towards m which I prefently knew to be Fidelio: S faid he to me, cesse your Amazement, and s low this Guard with fpeed, for every mome you flay here will be dangerous, and they w fately convey you to the Water-fide, when Veffel attends you, provided by your Father from whom, by my timely notice, came also this gua for he now repents him of his Obstinacy, wh occasioned these Evils, for which you were cufed, fearing you are too much guilty to fa in judification of yourfelf, and your crimes notorious to abide a Trial; and therefore be unwilling to leave you to the Mercies and Se rities of Law, that himself first brought Danger, waits for you at the Water-fide fome other Company.

blo and of flil wh cou the Roi had gai the equ

tha

ous F

Ned all of ing vide one weig off to about that

migl

paffi

It cilia about to de flood cried 16

d Obe

go a

ands or

Cham

had no

ather

hine o

Horse

which

compa

escribe

Refer

Horl

oot-me

a M

elf fre

whi

ingen

rds m io : S

and f nome

ey W

where

er fre

is gua

wh

vere

mes

e be

ht i

de v

Be

Being conducted to the Veffel, and the Wind blowing fair so that we left Syracuse far aftern. and in a few hours after wholly loft the fight of the Island of Sicilia; the Gale continuing fill fair we gained a Ken of the Isle of Malto, where we did not land, but continuing our course almost three days we gained view of the main Continent of Africa; and about the Evening of the third day we anchored before the mighty city of Carthage, the rival of the Roman Empire; between them as yet Fortune had left it uncertain and undoubtful which should gain Precedency, and continue Masters of all the they known World, fince their Forces were equal, and their Valour not much different, to that Fate had left it to be decided by the various Chances of War.

Here we landed and provided ourselves of all Necessaries, as well offensive as desensive, and all other things needful, which our so hasty parting from Syracuse would not permit us to provide and furnish ourselves withal: we lay there one whole Day, and then going aboard we weighed anchor, and hoisted sail, and so mace off to sea; where our Intentions were to cruise about, in Expectation meet with some Vessels that came lately from Syracuse, of whom we might enquire Tidings of what we all did so passionately desire to know.

It was not feven days fince we parted from Syilia, and two fince we left the Coast of Africa, about the time of the Day when the Sun begins to decline towards the West, when a Boy that shood centinel on the top-mast head suddenly cried out a Sail, a Sail; being demanded from

E 4

whence

and

6 fer

Ar

for

ren

in i

· the

W

I did

ture o

vet th

and t

name

a Thi

ed, th

great

made

my E

make

his So

now t

and a

Sides.

to bid

apper left it

when

b mu

forced

ed our

ain D

wuld]

at De

whence she steer'd her Course? He returned answer from Sicillia. This began to augment my ardent Desire I had to have News from Syracuse, so that I gave Commands to the Pilot to steer his Course to her, which he had no sooner performed, but the Boy called out again, saying. Prepare for your Desence, for this Vessel bears to us with all speed for an Assault. He had scarce ended these Words, but our Eyes did give us proof they were sit for a present Fight.

This fight caused them to forget the Concernments of others, and to think on nothing for much as to provide for their own fafety; yet they agreed with one accord chearfully to make good their Defence, and manfully to guard themtelves; we had hardly made our Preparations for a Refistance, but we faw this Vessel with great Dexterity and Agility ready to board us on the Weather fide , their Revelins in a Moment were ready to grapple with our Tellel brave Astault, and they as gallant a Repulse our Archers fcarce spent an Arrow in vain neither did their's flack their Duty; the Fight continued therp while we lay off the one from the other; but when in spi ht of our best Endeavours, they grappled our Vessels together, and then we came to Hand-blows, the Fight become dreadful and bloody on both fides; we were hardly fastened the one to the other but l heard him that feemed to be Captain of the Velfel say these Words to his Soldiers, 'Arm your telves with Courage, Noble Hearts, and le the King of Sicillia know you are valiant, we are not mistaken; see Fortune hath presented the murtherous Villain an Object to our Eyes,

W. Democ

ed an-

nt my acufe.

fleer

er per

aving.

bears

le had

d give

ncern-

ing fo

; yet

make

themrations

with

ard us

Mo.

effel ved

pulse

vain.

Fight

from

fi En-

ether.

Fight

; we

but I

Vel

your

d le

t. we

ented

Eyes,

and brought him a Sacrifice to our just Refentments; now let the innocent Deaths of Artemesia and Destembna tharpen your Swords for just Revenge, and let their sorrowful Parents see your Fidelity and Interest you take in their Wrongs, when you present them with the Head of their mortal Enemy.

When I did hear thats A temefia once named I did guess of their Bufiness; but I think the Nature of all Men is such, that if they be wicked, yet they cannot bear to be exclaimed against; and though I was guilty of all that was bad, vet I could not with Patience receive the Nicknames of Villian and Murtherer; my Life was Thing so wretched, and by me so little mindd, that I should not defire to preserve; yet the great promise this Fellow made of my Head, made me resolve not to part from it friendly to my Enemies, at such a time when I was in good. Capicity to defend it; this raised my Anger to Take a flout Resistance, and his Oration caused his Soldiers to affail us with great Courage; now the Fight began to be at the highest, and a great Number of Men was flain on both Sides, this Battle was fought till the Sun began bid good night to our Horizon, leaving this oper World in Darkness; yet Fortune had thit doubtless to which fide we should incline; then we were pressed by our Enemies, with much Force and Vigour that my Men were oned to retire, whilst they furiously mountour Vessel; here I exposed myself to cerin Dangers, very willing to part with Life fo I hald have loft it nobly in refifting my Enemies; t Death flies them that feek him, and intrudes

E 5

an

th

di

y

0

me

If

giv

the

car

but

gat

hin

wit

W

laft

the

my

the

dow

1 00

Cab

thou

Was

titue

But

pre

tron

on fach as defire his absence; as I was desperate ly braving the utmost Danger, I met and en gaged with their Commander, so greedily we combated one with another, and with so much defire endeavoured the Ruin of each other, that it was no wender Fortune made haste to determine of the End, many a cruel Blow was exchanged, till at last I push'd my Enemy so close ly, and redoubled my blows with so much Violence, that directing a blow which fell on his Head with my greatest Force, it parted it it two, so that he fell down sprawling on the deck thus he which had so considently disposed only head, could not secure his own from m Sword.

This Sight began to abate the Courage our Enemies, and to revive the Spirits of m almost vanquished Men; for returning upono despairing Enemies with a greater Force that at first, they made a mighty Slaughter an having dispatched all those in our own Vestel with great speed, we boarded our Enemies, that the Offensive were now become the Dose five, and performed their Parts fo ill in mai taining it, that we foon became Conquerors the other Ships, committing all the Souls to t Places appointed for their Deferts, where t Spirits of all Men are rewarded according their Merits; the dead Bodies of our Men a also of our Enemies, we cast over board in Per Dangye

The night became extreme dark, not one St appeared in the Firmament, as if they had d dained to behold so bloody a Tragedy, so the we were forced to strike up Lights, the better see to clear our Vessels of the dead Carcasses, felf with a Torch in my Hand went to behold the Slain in the Enemies Vessel, where the Soldiers, the Tempest of their Revenge being not yet stilled, without pity cast as well the Wounded as the Dead out of the Vessel, when their Wounds, Miseries, Intreaties, Prayers, nor dismal Moan, could persuade them to Mercy.

Among many that were thus used, one of them whom my Men had taken up in their Arms ready to cast him away into the Billows of the raging Ocean, cried out, 'O Sirs! Spare me one Moment and bring me to your Commander, to whom I shall relate such Secrets as he is as yet ignorant of; this had not preferved his Life if I had not given a speedy command to the Soldiers to hold their Hand, and running with their Lights I came also with mine, for to fee if I knew him, but his Blood had fo disfeatur'd him, as I could gather no certain Knowledge that I had ever feen him before; which the wounded Man feeing with a mournful and low Voice, uttered their Words, Sir, faid he, you knew my Mafter Philafter, when you feem'd to much concern'd in the Relation I made you of the woeful Death of my Mistress Desdemona; he had scarce ended these Words, but through Weakness he sunk down in the arms of the Men that supported him. I commanded he should be conveyed away to a Cabbin with speed, and that my own Surgeon thould carefully dress his Wounds; all which was as foon performed as commanded; my Gratitude to the poor Man required thus much. But I had other found Reasons induced me to preserve his Life, if possible, since it was only from him, now all his Companions was dead I formuci her, that to deter was ex fo close ach Vio ed it i

he deck

posed o

esperate

om m rage of m roce that re an Veriel

Dofer Dofer mail erors s to th ere ti ding len a rd in ne St and d To th tter es, I

th

noi

not

fuc

rits

the

the

v el

Vič

thei

pref

Cau

from

tunes

their

he

ente

houl

t, I

ear t

nd la

refer

illin

oold

S Va

benc e Fe

But ward

orkin

rate

to

did not look for a true Relation and Intelligence how my Affairs stood affected in Syracule, As my own Interest required his safety, yet for Desdemona's sake, whose Remembrance I did prefer above my Life, considering he was once hers, I could do no other but esteem of him highly, and thank Fortune, who had offered me this Opportunity that I might in some measure express the Kindness I did yet retain of his Mistress, and my dear Desdemana

After we had cleanfed our Enemies Vessel, it being the strongest built, and boring Holes in the Bottom of the forsaken Vessel, we tunk it in the Sea, which being performed, we hoisted Sails, directing our Course towards the City Algiers and Barbary, so that it was about the Hour of Two in the Morning when I betook myself to my Cabbin to have my Wounds dress'd I had received in the last Fight; when the Surgeon had searched them, he assured me none of them were mortal.

Thus such as desperately seem regardless of their Lives, by a slight of Fortune preserve them; what should occasion it I cannot tell; if it be not that reasonable Men sly such as imprudently and lavishly cast away their Lives, esteeming them mad or frantick that so inconsiderately endanger themselves; or else Fortune and Victory, which be always Friends to sold and resolute Men, and assist resolute Spirits in their considerate Enterprizes, have agreed with Nature, who has planted a timerous Fear in the Hearts of Man when he is assaulted above his Expectations, and sees Wonders acted beyond his Capacity or Thoughts is daunted, being so studently surprised, their bold Assaler gives them them not time to recollect their Thoughts, but presses more sherce and desperately on them, that they stand gazing like Men metamorphised, not having the Courage to desend themselves, nor scarce to run away to preserve their Lives, such Advantage seems to wait on resolute Spirits, that their Enamies are charm'd, and when they meet a Spirit above their own, like all Men, they yield Precedency, and obey the greater, yielding Obedience to them as to their Superiors; Victory as it were, hovering her Wings over their Heads, to fright their Enemies, and to preserve them fafe.

tell-

cule.

t for

I did

once

him

d me

s Mi-

el, it

in the

Sails,

lgiers

elf to

I had

them

less of

referve

all; if

mpru-

ves, e-ortune o Bold

irits in with in the

ove his

beyond

gives them

But I dare not ascribe my Fortune to such a Cause, I sear just Heavens have preserved me from such small Danger for my greater Misfortunes, to make me a more ample Example of their Justice; for methinks Sleeping or waking hear poor Artemefia founding that dreadful entence in my Ears, (that when I feek death, it hould fly me, and when I would defire to keep t, I should be suddenly cut off) and I greatly ar the Issue, fince that after Artemefia's death; ad lastly, of my dearest Desdemona, I did alays esteem my Life as of a thing not worth. referring, being a Commodity I was always ling to part with, fince my Heart told me I wild expect no Comfort, now all my Felicity wanished away in the Original Cause, from tence it first received its Birth, and afterwards fewel that did preserve it.

But now, Madam, (said he) turning his Face wards Cynthia, I began to find contrary Effects taking in my Spirits since I have been so formule to have you in my Cuttody, so that I begin to prize my Life at its true Value and

Worth

Worth, and did never truly desire to live again until this Moment; I pray Heaven my prophetick Fears be not Presages and Forerunners of the Dangers which are related shall happen unto me.

Here Almerin proceeded forwards in relating the Misfortunes of his Life, whilft fair Cynthia could not refrain from spending some Tears out of the Treasury of her own Misfortunes, in pity to the unfortunate Loss of lovely, yet miserable Desdemona. Madam, said he, after my Wound were dress'd I betook myself to my Bed, but no before I had enquir'd of the Health and Condition the Prisoner was in; the Surgeon having a sured me of his Life, I did endeawour myself take a little Rest, after so much Pain and Toil.

Long wish'd for Day at last appeared, an Phæbus with his Glorious Rays cast a resple dent Lustre on the Face of the Water, when arose from my weary Bed, my Wounds pe mitting me, and my Desires persuading a calling on me, to the Chamber of the Wound Man, from whose Mouth I did not expect hear the Sentence and Period of my Miseri or to receive some little Comfort to sweeten t Calamities; after I had been affured by my S geon that he was in a Capacity to be vifited cannot fay whether my Resolution, or the P formance, were soonest put in Action, si hardly was the one conceiv'd, but the other ceiv'd Birth, fuch speedy Execution always tends on things of this Nature, that nothing without Repugnance make a demua to defer I went, but indeed accompanied with fuch F as forbidden Lovers are possessed with w

b

n

m tir

in

the

dem

tend

fine

and

time

ther,

in a f

Fears

tisfact

f this odeavo

gain

pro-

nners

ppen

ating

nthia

out of

bity to

erable

ut no

onditi

ing a

felf t

Toil.

d, an

esplei

when

ds pe

ng al

ound

cpect

Aiferi

my S

ifited.

the P

n, fi

other

wavs

thing

defer

uch F

ith v

they go to pay their unwelcome Oblations to the Goddess they adore, who fear to ask, fearing to be refused; being come to his Cabbin, and inquiring of his Health, fuch Gratulations having pase'd between us as are common and familiar to be used to one in such Extremity, I bespake him in this manner: My Friend, you may guess it is somewhat extraordinary, that would not admit of delay, which hath made me so soon venture forth to give you this untimely Visit which is dangerous to myself, and troublesome to you; Fortune has obliged me, in the midst of allmy Miseries, in making me the Preserver of one which sometime was Defdemona's, Love to her perfuaded me to be thus tender of your Welfare; but I have other Bufiness of Consequence which drew me hither, and would ill agree to be deferr'd to a longer time; it is the Welfare of my Father and Mother, by whose Intreaty I left Syracuse, leaving them engaged at the Moment of my departure in a fearful Skirmish; Nature persuades and my Fears thrust me forwards, to receive some Satisfaction from your Intelligence.

The wounded Man raising himself up in his d, casting his Eyes on me with a downcast and mournful Mood, with a weak Voice he uttered these Words: Sir, I should ill requite you for the Gratuity of my Life to give you a Relation that will add to your Torments; and it had been far better your Soldiers had cast me into the Sea, than that the Remainders of this woeful Life being preferred, should adeayour to put a Period to yours, leave this had News to be discovered by time, and let not

THOU

th

ar w

no

cid

oul

and

bed

the

Wh

they

from

ficual

form

tentio

the re

in the

had e

and b

row.

out of

well in s they

ery, a

cl.ow

p with

W:

the

House,

ody pla

his 1

your Curiofity unto you; I feel my Life growing towards an End, and all that is Man about me begins to decay, let not the last Fragments of my Life be a Medicine to procure your difquiet, rather than the Repose you expect. Here he continued filent, expecting my Reply, fo that I return'd him this Answer: Let not any Concernments of mine defer your Rela ion ; for Dangers and Mi fortunes are become fo familiar unto me, that the Strangeness is no Novelty, nor the Bug bears are not horrid enough to frighten me ; I am arm'd againft the worst Effects of Fortune that you can relate has befallen me; there is nothing now can make me more miferable then I am already, by the last Discourse of the lamentable Loss of my dearest Desdemona.

Sir, reply'd he, thefe be the Effects and Symptoms of a noble Mind, to bear with Advertity as well as Prosperity; that can welcome Misfortunes as well as Felicities; that is not Ambitions in his Happiness, or despairing in his Miferies, but wifely yields to what he cannot shun; feeing I have found you in this Temper, I shall make no farther scruple to satisfy your Request. Sir, you may understand, that you had fearcely passed the Threshold of my Master's Door, but he and his Lady come Home, accompany'd only with some few of their Friends, the rest having parted from them at the Grave; and thele kay'd not long, but comforting them in the bell Wife they might, urging Patience as the bell Remedy to cure their Miferies, they foon left them to return to their feveral Places of Abode Now being destitute of all that could disturb them, they became their own Disturbers, and med evour to but a Period to voors, Itave

sog set bus

being alone, they had a more ample Opportunity, to discover the true Value of what they had lost; they began now to consider they had lost the Light of their Eyes, the Staff of their Age, and the Glory of their House, in a Moment, when they did least expect it: and that she did not die by Age, or Sickness, or any Disease incident to Mankind, but that she was torn away out of their Arms in the Flower of her Youth and Beauty.

w-

out

ents

dif-

Icre

that

Con-

for

iliar

hten

For-

there

then

he la-

ymp-

erfity

Mis-

Ambi-

is Mi-

fhun;

I shall

equest.

carcely

or, but y'd on-

ft hav-

nd thefe

he belt

Here they let fall a shower of briney Tears, bedewing the Place where they fate, and filling the Room with the Eccho of their Complaints. When the Storm of Grief was fomething allay'd, they went Hand in I and into the Carden, and from thence unto the House of Pleasure there structed, and the same where Desdemona performed the last Violence on he feit; their Intention, as far as I could guess, being to spend the remainder of those Tears they had yet left in the fame Place, where their dearest Daughter had expi ed; they had newly feated themselves, and began with great freedom to vent their Sorlow, which fate so heavy upon their Hearts, out of the Floodgates of their Eyes, the Place el fuiting to accompany them in their Woes, they concern'd in this grievous Excess of Mity, a little Spaniel Dog, which always us'd to dow him, and in whom, before he was taken with Sorrow, he us'd to take great Delight, d been fearching and hunting up and down Walks, and young Springs and Thickets the Garden, and at last came up into the buse, and after he had before them wanmy play'd with a Paper, which he had brought his Mouth, as his usual Customs were to he best oon lest Abode. disturb

being carry

1

271

10

C

im

out

Re

De

fear

who

Ipu

once

while

Afte

ther'

beard

into o

that

Curre

wipe .

Eyes,

the Le

turn'd

your

Th hying carry all things he found to his Mafter, at last he brought this, where he stood frisking his Tail. as willing his Mafter to receive and make much of him for what he had brought him; but because it was common with him daily to do as much, they neglected him as a Thing of no Concernment; when the Dog faw he had not that Welcome he used to receive, he leaped up with his Paws on his Mafter, making a kind of howling Noise, and holding up the Paper to wards him in his Mouth; this Action made my Master something more attentive; and as h would have thrust him from him, looking some thing nearer on the Paper that the Dog still hel in his Mouth, he discovered it to be a Lette fairly folded and fealed up, which he no foon did perceive, but he took it out of his Mout After he had looked on the Letter, and faw the Directions to Desdemona, he shewed it to h Lady, and both of them deferring their Sorro for a small time, they opened the Lett wherein they found not only Likelihood Suspicion, but certain Assurance, that you h been the only Cause, and none else beside, of their Misfortunes; that you had prisoned yo married Wife Artemefia, and although not tually, yet yourself was the Chief in the T gedy of Desdemona; I need not tell you w it contained, fince it was written by your and figned with your own Hand, being fe with your Signet at Arms.

At the Period of this (faid Almeria to Chia, who gave earnest Attention to his discouthe wounded Man growing faint, deferred Relation for a small time. Now to my Chegan to see how Heaven glories in divulging aft he Tail. much ut bedo as Conot that p with d of per to ade my as h fome till hel Lette o foor Mout faw th t to b Sorro Letti nood a you ! de, of ned yo not not the T you w your

discou ferred my C

Faults and Crimes of Offenders; and left we hould ascribe and refer the revealing of them to common Caufes, fee they make a poor Spaniel Dog the Instrument of my Discovery; thus the most neglected and forgetten Things they many times make Executors of their Will, lest Men should lay such things came by Fortune, and such by Chance; but in this Example we may behold the immediate Hand of Heaven made manifest to our Capacity; as for my Letter, fince the time my Resolutions were altered concerning the sending of it, as I have formerly related unto you, my Father and Mother coming in accidentally to wifit me the Morning of the same Day that I saw Desdemons afterwards convey'd to the Temple, fearing then they might have surprized me, in what I did endeavour to make a Secret to them, I put it hastily into my Pocket, to conceal it, not once minding or thinking on the securing of that which did so much concern the Safety of my Life. Afterwards, when I came to Desdemona's Father's House, where this Man gave me the whole Particular's of her Death; which when I had beard, leaving Fidelio and him together, I went into one of the most secret Alleys in the Garden, that I might give my Griefs unseen the greater, Current; where I drew out my Handkerebief to wipe of the wandring Tears that iffued from my Eyes, and at that fatal Moment, as far as I may tonceive by Conjectures, with that I drew out the Letter, so that my Repentance and Sorrow turn'd to my greater Rebuke and Punishment.

The Man proceeded forwards in his Relation, aying, After that they both understood by four Letter that you were the only Author of all

1

the

the

bred

Tur

foio

from

daug

dy R

turne

the r ligen

ing y

fait c

the]

this v

ning i

Intere

hjuri

o us

dead,

our V

out fo

both fi

he Ci

ays ti

shat t

nory,

hat I

ill be orth of life, ar

y you

an Sh

e Sen

the Calamities that had befallen them, they left off to grieve, and began now only to think of Revenge, which would be more acceptable to the injured Spirit of Desdemona than their fruitless Tears. Now Revenge reigned Supreme in their Thoughts; my Master, as if his Youth had been renewed at the Sight of your Letter, leaving his Lady at home, ran nimbly to the Judges of Criminal Causes, where producing the Letter, they with all Diligence let him have Power and Authority to apprehend you; to this end and purpose the Corrigedor was strongly assisted with many of my Master's Friends, where they feized you in your Father House, and by your Father's Order you wer again rescued, and conveyed to the Water-side where you escaped away; your Escape being made good by your Father, a strong party of Men affaulted him, which were Friends to m Master, and he making good his Defence wa there flain; scarce was he fallen but the Gam fon of the City came in, having notice from your Servant which you left with him wit what unequal Odds he was affaulted; imm diately they encompassed them in with all the Forces, destroying all of them, leaving not Man alive, so cruelly Revenging them for the Death of their Commander they so dearly after ted; your Servant being over-cast, and to forward in his Revenge for his Master's Deat unhappily was flain on the Place; your Moth was conveyed in a deadly Trance Home to h own House, where for very Grief for the Dea of her Husband, and the Loss of you, she in few Hours died.

ils lo rodiu Alylino 🗵

v left nk of ale to fruitreme outh etter, to the lucing n have [after' ather's to my ce wa Garri e fron m wit imm all the g not for th ly affe and to B Deat Moth e to h ne Dea the in

Day at last appeared, yet blushing to behold the Catastrophe of so fatal a tragedy, where the Streets lay covered with Blood and difmembred Men; Fame foon carried tidings of this Tumult and Disturbance to King Tarcridus, who biourned then with the Earl of Palermo, who from my mafter hearing the certain Cause of his daughter's Death provoking the king to a fpeedy Revenge, so that with all Expedition he reumed to Syracuse, where his Presence quitted the remains of any further Stirs, there was diu; to gent Enquiry made to discover you, but hear-r was ingyou were gone, he sent many Vessels in purhit of you among many that were fent forth, the Earl of Palermo and my matter fent out u wer his we are now in, at their own charge, maner-fide sing it with their own Servants, thinking their being Interest would oblige them to revenge their arty of Injuries more fully, promising great rewards bus all if we could secure you alive, or if lad, to produce your Head; in the mean time or Vessel was rigging, and meaking ready to out forth to fea, your Father and mother were wh folemnly interred in the great Temple of he City. Soon after we put to Sea, and in two ays time had the ill fortune to meet with you, that then happened is bleeding fresh in mecory, and therefore needs no Rehearfal; all at I know I have related unto you, which ill be caution enough I hope to perfuade you oth of these narrow Seas, if you do prize your ie, and the Lives of these men that accompayou, fince there is no Harbour on the Afriwe shore will secure you; for Sicilia being the the Government of the Carthaginian, Senate will not deny Sacredus, things of greater greater Consequence that the delivering of you up into his Hands, and to fly to the Komans is both dangerous and perilous, fince it is difficult. the Seas being befet for you; that you can't pass without discovery; I find Death taking Possesfion of my mortal Body and Soul, which is but a Tenant at Will ready to leave his Habitation: let not the last Remainders of this Life, to which you have shown so much kindness, be any occafion to destroy yours; that I may in some fort die free from the Obligation I stand indebted unto you in, I defire you to live; but I hold it better for me to die than to fee so many Miseries acted over fresh again, as I have been Spectator of: I feel Death feizing on me. Oh! whether am I going? To strange and unknown Shades, from whence none yet ever returned back again to give a Description, but whatever it be, it is a Refting-place for Innocency, then farewell reftless World, I shall find that there I could no ver find in thee. He pronounced these last Word imperfectly, and giving a grevious Groan h foon gave up the Ghost.

I no fooner faw him departed away, but drawing my Sword intended to have pierced me Heart, but being perceived by fome Officers of the Ship, which were prefent at this Relation fuddenly they refrained me from being my ow Murtherer, and by Force taking my Swor from me, they conveyed me to the Cabbin, as frantick and desperate Man; but first removing from thence all Things wherein there lay and Thought of Danger, appointing my Physicial and four Men besides to attend me; and gethering together in Council they agreed to ste their Course towards the Kingdom of Norwa fiest Voy failed bette difap

the

Gr

cor Re

we

the

touc

thing racu/ Loss

It ion or danger where us up t

Death that w overtak would end, we gers, and where external storm

Anchors where w Climate. you 15 15

ult,

pass

ffef-

but

on;

hich

occa-

fort

ebted

old it

feries

Etator

ether

nades.

again , it is

rewel

uld ne

Word

oan h

draw

ed m icers o

elation

ny ow

Swo

in, as

movit

lay ar

nyficia

and g

to fle

Norwa

the rather because they had heard that my Grandfather was a Man of great Repute in those Parts; and for that Reason they did all oncur, like the Heart of one Man, in their Resolves and Opinions of going thither. Away we went forth of the Mediterranean Sea, passed the Streights of Gibraltar, or Hercules Pillars. touching at the Isle of Cadiz, and taking in fielh Water and Victuals needful for fo long a Voyage, we left the African Shore aftern, and failed away due North; when I came fomething better to myself I could not much gainfay or disapprove what they had done, fince I had nothing could detain or persuade my return to Syracule, fince all my loss were vanished in the Loss of Desdemona, and my dear Parents.

It would be too tedious to give you a Relation over what Seas we pass'd, and how many langers we escap'd, falling over mighty Waters where the Waves Tike Mountains did almost lift sup to the Skies, and then again to cast us into a Valley like the Jaws of Death, fo that the Death we did fly from did feem to meet us, and that which we would have shunn'd began to overtake us; but by Heavens Ordinance, which would not permit my wretched Life should so nd, we escaped these fearful and dreadful Dangers, and were preserved free from Shipwreck, there every Wave threatned Ruin, and every form Destruction, so that at last we arriv'd afely at ____ where casting forth our hehors, and furling our Sails, we went ashore, here we foon found the great Alteration of the Cimate.

Here

Here was I accounted of a Stranger, all thought I had my Original from hence; and indeed I might well be term'd fo, fince the Country Customs and Manners of the People were all strange to me; and rather begat an Admiration, to see a Kingdom so very Poor, than a Hope to receive any Sustentation from them: I very believe, if King Tancredus and the Earl of Palerma had known of my being there, they would have scarce made so long and dangerous a Journey after me; so that I need not have given the King of Norway the Trouble to protect me in his Dominions; the very Coldness of his Country and dangerous Seas that lay betwixt Sicilia and this Place, were of Force enough for our Safety.

But Life alone without a Livelihood to main tain it, is a continual Death; I could not with out great Ingratitude leave these poor Men who had so willingly made themselves Comra nions in my Misfortunes to perish in an un known Land. We staid there about five months and all the Wealth I did enjoy ferved only t defray our Charges. Necessity began so muc to straiten me, that I had nothing left where withal to maintain almost a hundred Men. And nothing remained but the bare and intire Shi What enforced me to offer it to Sale; the poor Men hanging down their Heads with the Sen of Sorrow in Expectation of their future Co dition, none offered to object against the Propo fal I had made, for Nature call'd to be facishe many Merchants refiding there offered to buy but we could not fuddenly agree of the Price.

I fay
which to reti famin
Folly
Veffel
I know
but the
your M.

a ft

coft

proj

grin

his

long wide

his I

Bear

and f

first 1

Men,

enous

poor

which

lifue, at Nighid, av at his I frous thought the liboard, lime di the P ace, by all

in-

oun-

vere

lmi-

án a

i:I

Earl

they

rous

e gi-

otect

of his

et Si-

h for

main

with

Men

mça

n un

onths nly t

muc where

An

Shi

e poo

cishe

buy rice.

We were in this desperate Condition, when frange Man, or rather a Monster of a Man accofted us; his Stature was tall, his Body big. proportionable to his Height, his Looks very orim and fierce, his Hair dangling in Curls on is Shoulders like wreath'd Snakes, his Beard long and peak'd, his Mouth big, his Nostrils wide, his Nose sharp, his Face wrinkled, yet his Eyes darted Fire; his Cloth was made of Bear Skins, he came towards me with a grave and folid Pace; and standing still a little time, fift viewing me, then casting his Eyes on my Men, he thus spake, Sir, where there not Graves enough in Sicilia, but you must needs bring these mor Wretche; to make their Tombs in the Snow which covers all this Country? Marvel not that Ifay Sicilia, for I can relate the deepest Secrets which occasion'd you to abandon your Country, pretire yourself of this milerable Place, where famine is ready to feize on you all; let your felly proceed no farther as to make Sale of your Vessel, for with that you make of your Lives; Iknow you will plead Necessity as your Excuse. but that shall be suddenly remedied by me; let your Men go aboard your Vessel and expect the fue, and about the Hours of eleven and twelve # Night fail not to meet me here exactly. This aid, away he went, leaving me in Amazement e Sen this Discourse; yet hoping the best, and dee Con from to fee the end, I request my Men to go. Propositionard, which accordingly they did.

The appointed Hour being come, and the lime drawing near, and I accordingly attending the Place nominated; when after a small staye, by the glimmering Light of the Stars, hich shine very bright in these Northern

brig

clea

livi

Wes

abo

ill-f

vie

the

till

difr

was

ir

wh

iffu

fton

rou

gre

far

hin

Ha

eari

and

turi

thu

" C

·V

· n ti

· d er re

tl R

' ti

ed t

Parts, I could perceive one make up toward me, and when the Distance began to grow le between us, I foon discerned it to be the sam Man which had ordered my being there at the Time; when he cast his Eyes on me, and far stand there ready, without speaking one Won unto me he cast a mantle on the Ground, bid ding me remove from the Place where I flood and stand upon it; his fearful Looks, strang Actions and Gestures, made me fear to abid the Issue, yet having not Courage enough disobey his Commands, I went and stood upo it accordingly; which I had no fooner don but he placed himself by me, and drawing out Book forth his Bosom, he began to read france Characters in an unknown Language, which understood not; with a Wand which he had I his Hand three Times he circled the Mantle then turning himself to the East, then to the West, then to the South, and lastly to the North, when on a sudden there arose a ten pestuous Wird, and in a Moment the Mant began to remove off from the Ground, and nimbly to mount with us into the Air; in a few Moments we were lifted up above the Sight Earth, flying swiftly away on the Wings of the Wind, till about the Hour that Lucifer, that glorious Star, did begin to appear, then the Mantle began to descend towards the Earth a strange unknown Place, and softly seated hard by the mouth of a dismal Cave, he becko ed me to follow him, which accordingly I di being entered the Cave I did behold many fr cious and fumptuous Rooms richly hanged w Cloth of Arras and Tapeftry: I still follow him in the midst of the Vault, where hung brig

oward

ow le

ie fam

at the nd far

Wor

d, bid

frood

ftrang o abid

ugh

od upo

r don

ng out

ftrang

which had i

Mantl

Mant

r, that ien th

arth

ated

becko

I di

ny sp

ed wi

ollow

hung

brig

bright and shining Carbuncle, which gave a clear Light to the rest of the Rooms; all the living Creatures I did behold passing along were many ill favoured old Women deformed above what I can describe, or you imagine; ill shapen, and more strangely attired; they all vielded a kind of Revenge to this old Man as their Chief; we went through many Rooms. till at last we came into an inner Parlour, more difinal and fearful than the rest; on the Walls was painted many strange and monstrous shapes; in the midst of the Room hung two Lamps. which gave a blue and dim Light, from which iffued a fulphurous and flinking Stench of Brimfione; hard by the Lamps was feated a large round Table, and on the Table lay a very great Book, and by the Table stood a Chair, far above the common Size, here he feated to the himfelf, and leaning his Head on his Right to the Hand about a quarter of an Hour, he was very a tenearnest in turning over the Leaves of the Book and at last leaving it open on the Table, he d, and turned himself towards me, and bespake me n a few thus : Sight o ' Almerin of Sicilia, thou art come to purs of the 'chase a Hab tation in this remote Part of the World; wonder not at what you have feen, 'nor at what you fee, but leave your Admira-' tiofi intire for the time to come, for the Days draw near at hand, when your Wealth shall exceed the riches of Norway; Merchants from remote Parts shall be happy in your Favour; the Time is come when Fame shall found the Report of you in this World; for your cruel-'ties shall make you famous.' This said, be turnif the Book towards me: 'Look here, said be

Re

VOL

Poi

Qu

the

fit

you

COT

at 1

bei

W

CI

he,

cin

cre

2 cha

olo

acc

M

ru

the

im

can

an

Li

the

aft

m

Ti

M

27

and behold this hugh Volume, fill'd with the Names of fuch Servants as I have taken in the behalf of my Lord Lucifer; it is no small Advantage that he defigns you the honour to be one of his This faid, he offered me Pen and be one of his This faid, he offered me Pen and Penknife, and a small Cup, saying, What you do, perform it quickly, for the Night begins to grow old, and you have many Miles to return to the Place from whence you came.

I, who then had not Reason to consider of the Circumstances, thinking this Lucifer was some great God, that our Forefathers did never know, and that he was pitiful because he commiferated my woeful condition, and judging myfelf happy in being own'd by fo great a Deity, I made no Scruple to perform what he commanded me; fo that taking the Penknife, I opened a Vein in my left Arm, while the old Seignor held the Cup to receive the Blood, and having bled some small Quantity, stopp'd the Incision, and wrote according to the Presidents of others there before me, and figned it with my Name, this done he delivered a Bag of Gold into my Hands, faying, Let this suffice to victual your ship, and provide what Necessaries you are in want of; you must now turn Rover, or in a more proper Sense, Pyrate, and by that means raife your Fortunes on the Sea; here also I will give you a Treasure shall help you in your Need, and fecure you in the midst of Danger. Saying this, he shew'd me a small Compass, de nominating and shewing the four Quarters of the World Here, continued he, is a Jewel not to be valued; if you want to fail towards the East you shall obtain your Defire; if you are puriu'd fail towards the West, and you shall secure your Retreat

Retreat; yet take this Caution with you, that you fleer at fuch Time, according to the feveral Points of this Compass, and not of the known Quarters of the World, for this varies from them Rules; now what remains, but that you fit and eat what is prepared for us, and that you return again to your Veffel.

ith the

in the

fmall cur to en and at you

begins

iles to

ider of

r was never

com-

g my-

Deity,

com-

ife, I ne old

, and

ne In-

nts of

my

ld in-

clual

you

r, or

that

alfo

your

nger.

, de

the ot to

East.

u'd.

our

reat

me.

This faid, he left that difmal Room, and conducted me to one of the Tables I faw covered at my first coming in, where we seated ourselves being served and attended by an ill look'd old Woman. Having taken some small Repast, the Cloth was taken away, and for his Diversion he commanded the o'd Woman to come before him, which was no fooner done, but pronouncing many strange Speeches, from the most fecret Part of the Cave there was heard to proceed a bewitching and delightful Noise of sweet charming Musick; at the hearing of this the old deformed Woman began to Dance in form, according to the Steps of the Musick, when in a Moment the Sweetness changed, feeing more rude and harst; and in the turning of a Hand, these old Hags were transformed into the shape of Wolves, still dancing after a rustick Manner; immediately the Musick altered, and they became all metamorphosed into the shape of Lions, and by the changing of the Notes into their own Likeness again, and so continuing dancing while the Melody ceased, and then they gave over, after which the old grim Vizzir thus bespake

I would detain you with me longer, but the Time is short, and your Journey long, and your Men ardently expect your Return; but before you to, take this Present from my Hand; it is of no

Small

and fi

fage (

ling t

the G

it wa

all th

Time

alfo t

felf a

that !

my .

joint

conti

fpenc

man

ed, a

Gold for t

licki

inng

of t rece

rece: Hor

the

and

mig

that and

con

ing wh

small Esteem, neither will it be of mean Use unto you; by Virtue of this Eolus shall be your Slave, and Eoreas and Zephivu shall attend you, and Fortune, in spight of herself shall be your Friend. This said, he drew from his Bosom a small Cord knit with about one hundred Knots: If you be calmed (continued he) undo one of those Knots, and you shall have a Gale according to your Desire at all times, and on all occasions; for my own Part I cannot accompany you back to your Vessel, but one of these shall; pointing to the old Women.

This faid, we arose from the Table and went forth, where one of the Hags spread a Mante on the Ground. I was ordered as before to stand on it, while he placed one of these horrid Monflers by my Side, which being done he takes his Book, as at first, and circling the Mantle with his Wand he bade me Farewell; mean while the Mantle arose from the Ground, and ascended aloft into the Air, so that we soon lost fight of the Cave, and parting the Air with an incredible Swiftness, being carried after such a rate that in a small Time we had gained the Kingdom of Norway, and the mantle began to descend where it first took me up; I was no sooner gone off it, but immediately it vanished from my Sight, so that I had not a minutes time to return Thanks for these Kindnesses so freely conferr'd on me.

The Day began now to break in the East, which forced the Shades of Night to retire; (while I stood musing on the strange Passages) Aurora leap'd nimbly from watry Neptune. This fight caused me to make means to get Abroad, which I soon purchased; where coming I sound my Men almost Dead with Despair; but my return

neturn began to enliven and quicken their Hope. and from my Countenance they began to prefage of their own good Fortunes; being unwilling to keep them in suspence, I shewed them the Gold, and acquainted them on what Terms i was given; I gave them a true Rehearfel of all the Accidents that had befallen me from the Time I left them unto that present Hour: And allo the Discourse of the old Man, touching my filf and them; I left nothing unrevealed of all that happened, but discovered all to a Tittle; my Discourse charmed them so, that they all jointly with one Applause willingly offered to continue subject to my command, and freely to spend their Lives in my Defence; I gave them many Thanks for their Affection formerly shewed, and their Kindnesses still continued towards me, and diffributing to every Man a Piece of Gold, I kept the Residue to provide Necessaries for the Ship; we all went ashore, merrily Frolicking out the enfuing Day; all of them banishinng their Fears, began to grow fprightly and lively, like many Flowers that in the Absence of the Sun drop their Heads, and at its return received new Life. From this new Hope they received fresh Courage; and they that not an Hour before had not Valour enough to defend themselves with the Thought of what they had, and the Hope and Expectation of what they might have, became confident and resolute; so that the greatest Impossibilities became easy, and the greatest Difficulties possible to be overcome by them. The next day towards the evening we weighed Anchor, and loofed the Sails, which had lain a long time furled up; letting y our Colours, away we went, leaving the

your

your om a iots:

those

ig to

for your the vent int e and lon-

his his the da-

the ible t in

of ere fo iks

e; e;

d,

n

City of _____at our Backs; and how to Experience my Compass we seer'd towards the East accordingly, and being impatient to prove the Trial of my Krots, I loofed one, and upon a fudden there arose a ft ff Gale of Wind, which forced our Ship forwards with fuch speed, that with our Canvas Wings it rather feemed to fly than to fail; thus we spent the greatest Part of the Night, thinking it to be long and tedious because it doth so much defer our Expectation of the ensuing Day. Long-wish'd for Day a last appeared, so that we might discern on our Larboard Side a very stately Ship sailing along at this fight we altered our Course, and made up to it with speed, and stormed it with our Arrows, but found fo small a Refistance that we foon boarded the Ship, making Prize of all, as well Ship as Lading. We followed the same Course we formerly steer'd by the Directions of the Compass; in a few hours fail we took two Ships more, both richly laden, and cast all the Souls over-board, as we did the first; this was our Custom for a while, lest by preserving them we had ruined ourselves, by the Intelligence they might have given to the King of that Country, unto whom they did belong, and perfuade them to a Revenge while we were yet in our Infancy of Rising, and so have rooted us up, and fruftrated our Intentions; thus securely we began to lay a good Foundation, and Hopes of becoming greater on the Ruin of others, till we grew to a Capacity to make Opposition against the strongest Enemy that durit disturb us. Why, Madam, need I enlarge myself on Particulars of this Nature, or clog your Ears with fuch fuch quet V

Boo one acco when othe towa vere gain whi den cious more the then that the opart forth Prize

Refi fmal way all C

I set Office the

Thu

by

fuch Discourses as have been too dull, and frequent in the Relation I make you?

now t rds the prov

upor which

, tha

to fly

dious

ation ay at

1 our

ong

made

OUI

t we

I. as

ame

ns of two

the

Was

em

nce

hat

er-

in

us

ly

oes

ill

IS.

i-

We now began to steer our course for the Coaft of Norway, when we differned a Ship making after us with full Sails, and fearing to loofe the Rooty we had gotten. I fpeedily began to unde one of my Knots, and to steer towards the West. according to the observation of my Compass. when fuddenly there arose a contrary Gale of Wind, fo that in a Moment we loft fight of the other Vessel, and failing with a strong Wind, towards the Evening of the next Day we discovered the Coast of Norway, which we soon gained : we anchored and landed our Goods. which were very Rich, where we made a fudden Sale, but yet preserving what was most pretious to make a Present of it to the King, the more to endear and oblige him to our Interest; the Money I would have shared equally among them all, but they would not agree to that, for that by their Importunity I was forced to receive the one half, with which I redeem'd the best part of my Grandfather's Possessions; we put forth to Sea again, and returned with many rich Prizes, as is almost incredible; I redeemed the Refidue of my Grandfather's Estate, and in a imall time purchased greater Lordships, yet always referving a great Stock of money ready on all Occasions; all the Ships that was fit for War let forth to Sea again, making of my own men Officers, which had as their Servants many of the King of Norway's Subjects that went with them, and in that way continued a long Time. Thus we dispersed ourselves on the Sea, and beame mighty on the ocean; if we mist of a booty Water, we fought it on Land; and on the East-fide of Britain, and the western Parts of Scitland, we went ashore, plundering and sacking whole Towns, and conveying our Prey aboard we return'd fafely home, fo that my Fame began to rife in all parts, and spread abroad in foreign Countries, fo that not one tittle of the old Man's Words fell to the Ground unfulfill'd.

My Wealth growing grent, and my Riches daily increasing, the King of Norway honoured me so much, as to offer me to his own Neice to Wife, willing to continue me in the City Royal with him, and to ordain a Deputy over my Affairs at Sea, that I might take a little Pleafure and Ease after so many past Miseries; I promised to perform all that he defired, after I had been forth one Voyage more, and at my return to submit to whatever he should command me; I gave him many obliging Thanks for his Concern he had for me, and fo took my Leave of him, promising a speedy return. Our Ship being ready, and the Wind blowing fair, we quickly left Naraway, and failing about three Days by the Directions of the Compass Eastwards, and meeting no Prize, we severed ourfelves to divers Quarters, fo that I left myfelf alone, only with this Admiral Ship we are now in, and cruifing about some time to little Purpose, we resolved to put ashore on the East Parts of Albion (as oftentimes we had done before) to forage for Cattle to victual our Ship; when at our first landing, Fortune presented us with the Sight of your Brother, who flood in Opposition against a very great Number in your Defence; this Sight diverted our former Intentions, fo that we marched towards them, not to keep

vant

affau

200C

Nun

your me h

na;

of th

myfe

joyfu

pines

to be

T

and I

relati

feem

my (

find

or to

fore

judic

my

will

may

Crim

but f mefia

had a

Arte

Defa

conft

have

ts of

fack-

y a-

ame

n fo-

old

ches

ured

e to

oy-

my lea-

; I

my

m-iks

ny

ur

ir,

ee

11-

Ir-

elf

W

r-

ts

n

visit either Party, but to make our utmost Advantage of both; at the Sight of us those that assaulted your Brother sted away, and he only keeping his Station, undaunted made him sight good against us all, till being overpowerd by Number, we took him Prisoner, and with him your fair self, Fortune above measure making me happy for the Loss of my dearest Desdemona; so that there rests nothing now, but that I return to Norway, never to trust the Dangers of this liquid Element any longer, there to offer myself, and what I enjoy, at your Feet, and joyfully to build my whole Felicity and Happiness, in the Hopes I have conceived one Day to be yours.

This, Madam, continued he, is the Period and End of my difmal Story, which I have truly related, not omitting ought might make me feem less faulty; but rather I have aggravated my Crimes, and added to my Offences; for I find it impossible to relate Falshoods unto you. or to excuse myself with Untruths; I am before a Judge (your fair felf, Madam) who can judiciously and wifely dilate upon and censure my Offence, which weigh'd and confider'd. will rather inforce Pity than Resentments, that may prove fatal unto me, fince none of my Crimes have proceeded from my Inclinations, but from my adverse Fate. Did I practise Artemesia's Death? Remember that wicked Issue had a noble Parent, Love; was I unconstant to Artemesia? Oh remember my Constancy to Desdemona: Think if I could have been unconstant I might have been less wretched; if I have obliged you in the Rehearfal, or disobliged myself, I am not able to judge; yet consider how willing I am to court all Opportunities to endear you, and that I hazard my own Interest for the pettiest Occasion to oblige you; there is something due to that; should you hold me guilty I will not justify myself, or judge me Innocent I would continue silent, and make no Reply, but rest satisfy'd in granting your Request in this Rehearsal and Relation of the Hiltory of my Life.

my

000000000000000000000

The Continuation of the History of Orsamus and Cynthia.

TERE Almerin ended the Story of the Adventures of his Life, leaving Orasmus and Cynthia in Admiration and Aftonishment; they faw he was purfued by a divine Hand, and that it was impossible for him to fly his Fate, so that they began to look on their own Condition, fearfully apprehending the Calamities might befall them, in being Prisoner to one who being follow'd by Divine Vengeance, made all miserable that were concerned in any thirg that appertained unto him : they well knew what they could expect or receive from the Hands of one whose Life had been monstrous, but the latter Part most fearful and horrid, their Fears almost mide them despair, but that they did remember Heaven doth always affift the Virtuous in their greatest

Gr W

Re

kno he the Ha of dies he Ho

in in abi

way Ma ceat

diffi as ti fitue tinu does not from now

101.

tuou greatest Calamities, and is nearest at Hand with Remedy and Relief, when our Miseries become most desperate and past Cure.

nfider

es to tereft

ere is

d me

me

te no

Re-

Hil-

Ad-

and

hey

hat

hat

ar-

fall

ol-

ble

er-

ey

ne

er

oft

er

Alexander Magnus, being by the States of all Greece chosen Captain General, and to make War with the Persians, before he tock Ship he enquired after the Estate of all his Friends, to know what Means they had to follow him; then he distributed and gave to one Lands, to another a Village, to this Man the Custom of seme Haven, to another the Profit of some Burrough Town, bestowing in this Manner the most part of his Demesns and Revenues; and when Perdieus, one of his Lieutenants, asked him what he referved for himself? He answered, I leave Hope for Alexander; fo great Confidence had this noble Warrior in his own Virtue; nothing in the World is more common than Hope; it abides with the most Prosperous, nor doth it abandon the most Wretched; without Hope our Life would be insupportable, for as the Winds. do not always blow vehemently, fo happy Men are not ever Fortunate, nor unhappy Men always Miserable; Hope easeth the Burthen of Man's Miseries, and it never fails him until he ceases to be; Hope is the best Comforter in the greatest Adversities, because nothing so much diffipates the Sharpness of present Calamities, as the Hope of future Pelicities; there is Vicifstudes in all Things, and nothing below continues in one State and Condition; Winter does not continue ever, and the Moon is not always in her Wain; those Fortune frowns on to Day she may smile on to Morlow; the Air is not always Tempestuous, withe Sun continues not long clouded; vir tuous Persons may fall into Missortunes, but they be of small Durance. These Considerations did fomething allay and diffipate the Grief our disconsolate Lovers endured, elle it had been too heavy a Burthen, for their Condition feemed fo desperate only a Divine Power could relieve them, fince human Affistance failed them; the Relation of Almerin's Life, instead of a Divertisement that Cynthia expected, became an Addition to their own Miseries, and an Augmentation of their Fears; yet in civility she was enforced to render him Thanks for his Narration; after some discourse had passed, and night began to cloath herself in a Sable Black, so putting a Period to their Discourse, Orasmus and Almerin, each taking their respective Farewells of Cynthia, left her to her Rest; Orasmus retiring to his Cabbin, and Almerin to give Commands to his Soldiers concerning the ordering of the Ship. Some days passed away, while they cruifed about in Expectation of some more Prizes, that they might not go home unloaded to Norway. This Confideration alone retarded their Voyage.

In the mean time Almerin prosecuted his suit to Cynthia with much Eagerness, still keeping himself in the Bounds of his Respect, until by the Return Cynthia's Beauty, his Love blew his Lust into a Flame, which could not be extinguished without Peril to either Side; Love is a Passion all other most lovely, until Lust takes a Moiety, and becomes his Rival; then it becomes a very Tyrant, and is subject to the greatest Villany; for where Passion bears Sway, there is no Place admitted for Reason to plead; no wonder

wond with made Reaft but a breed gets fible

Al
they ly in treate
my

fort Mea

' con ' obli He co

have termin left the in his as the and g faid he fince F Sifter's to gain thall has be bencef

but

ati-

rief

nad

ion

uld

m;

fa

me

ug-

vas ra-

ht

fo

nus

re-

1245

ve

-10

y,

ne

n-

ne

iit

ng

y

is

n-

a

2

e-

t-

re

0

r

wonder than if Almerin broke the Laws wherewith he had confirmed himself, since Reason made them, and Passion is always a Rebel to Reason; sometimes they gave him fair Hopes, but as often deser him with Delay; but Delay breeds Impatience, and Impatience as often begets Extreams: This was fully verified in Almerin, although Cynthia sorbore as much as possible to treat him harshly.

About nine days had passed away since first they were furprixed, when he came very rudely into her Cabin, and with much Infolence treated her in this Manner: ' Madam, I see all my Civilities have been loft, and you provoke 'me to destroy all the Considerations that have flowed from that Fountain. I have henceforth decreed to feek my Satisfaction by other 'Means, so that I allow you until to morrow to frame a Resolution, and if that fail to o'ercome your Obstinacy; I shall know how to oblige you unto it in spight of your Aversion: He confirmed this Menace with many others; and his Actions agreeing thereunto, told him tohave spake nothing but what he had fully determined before in his Mind; faying this, he left the Cabbin without the least respect, and in his going out he fortuned to meet Orasmus. as then going to pay his usual Visit to Cynthia. and greeting him in this rough Language, Sir, haid he, Remember you are my Prisoner; and ince Fortune gives you no greater Tie over your Sifter's Affections, than the will not fuffer you to gain your Freedom, from henceforth you hall be treated like a Slave, or like one that has baffled and deluded me with false Hopes, enceforth I shall find other Ways to compass my ends, without your Intercession, until to mor. row I have allowed your Sifter to weil ber Wilfulness to my desires, which if you can perfect you may both yet be happy. Saying this he left him not expecting a Reply; which Fortune fell cut well for Orfamus, for his Answer no coubt would have incenfed the Pyrate to prefent extremities, for Almerin spake to a Man whose Spirit was not capable to be frighted by Bugbears; instead of being amazed at his Change, it began to rouze his Courage for a speedy Revenge: Base Man, said be, dost thou think thy Villany shall always remain unpunished, and that there is no Period fet on thy Wickedness. This faid, he entered into Cynthia's Cabbin, yet composing all that was sierce and terrible in his Looks to a lovely Sweetness, he found the Idea of all his Felicity bathing that lovely Object in Tears; Love and Pity would have persuaded him to bear her Company in her Sorrows, she made Grief feem so lovely; but better Reason taught him to diffipate those Floods of Woes, if possible, that thus oppress'd her; when falling at her Feet, embracing her Knees with a tender Emotion of Pity and Compassion, Why these precious Showers, Madam? (faid be) Wherefore the Overflowings of Grief? Is it because this Villain has so confidently set a Time to finish bis defires; Alas my dear Princess, be does but burry on his own Punishment, and set an End unto bis Villany; fear not the Iffue, Madam, for if you fear I shall faint; from your Eyes I shall receive my Deftiny! Oh let them not be overcast with Clouds as a certain Omen of my Overthrow; Death itself could not beget an Effect in my Soul like your Tears. Ob cease to exercise to or main rits, faid tune nor with paffic it in more tion Mist and r blame fince those Mada 2 The Service Reconstruction that y Prince vilhed

Cynt

happy should

In the D:

the Dithem famus nion of Almer furthe

thofe

those Cruelties on yourself: And be not so unkind to one that loves you above his Life.

or.

104

im

cut

ubt

tre-

pi-

rs :

gan

e:

any

ere

aid, ling

o a his

rs;

to

ght

offi-

at

der

re-

nish but End

for

aft

er-

111 cile

All the Time of this Discourse Oralmus remained at her Feet; but recollecting her Spirits, taking him by the Hand, Rife, Orsamus, said she, and blame not my Griefs, since Fortune intends to put no Period to our Misfortunes, nor End to our Miseries; she is become cruel without Remorfe, and pitiless without Compassion; if I think of Hope, she soon transforms it into Despair, and if I dare imagine I may be more happy, she soon curbs me in that Presumption; if there is no determinate End fet to my Misfortunes, why should I expect any longer, and not court Death as the last Remedy? Then blame not the Tears I shed in so woeful a Case, fince some fall for Orasmus, and accompany those that drop away for Cynthia. Orasmus ravished at this free and unconstrain'd Answer of Cynthia, and Manifestation of her Pity, Oh, Madam, faid he, how happy do you make me, 2 Thousand such Lives as mine spent in thy Service were but poor Arguments to make a Recompence for the least of those precious Tears that you shed: Oh rest contented, my dearest Princess; I am only safe in your Security, and happy in your Satisfaction. It is impossible I hould be thus fortunate, and yet be unhappy.

In fuch mournful Discourse they pass'd away the Day, till Night approach'd to accompany them with her dismal Shades; this Night Orsamus continued with Cynthia a woesul Companion of her Sorrows; nor was it gainsaid by Almerin, since he apprehended it would be a surtherance to his Designs; much Discourse passed

puffed between these unfortunate Lovers that enfuing Night so woeful, that my Pen cannot decipher them in their true Colours, and therefore I cannot but be filent.

Night began to cast off her fable Mantle, and Luna gave an exit to this upper World, darkness was hush'd away, and Phæbus newly darted his resplendant Rays from the East, when cur disconsolate Lovers preparing themselves for the Difaffers that might befal them that fucceeding Day. Scarce had the Aurora of the Day given Place to that Illustrious Planet the Sun, but Almerin with hasty Steps made towards the Cabbin Door, which w s no sooner perceiv'd by Ora/mus, but he made ready for his Entertainment, Cynthia persuaded him from an Attempt upon his Life, but he returned Answer, Cease, fair Soul, and let me alone, middle Ways to fuch Enterprizes are dull. By this time Almerin came to the Cabbin Door, which was opened unto him by Orasmus; at his entrance he fuddenly difarmed him of his Sword with fuch an impetuous Fury, that before he could cry for Help, or make the least Refistance, he cast him deadly wounded at his Feet, Lye there thou main obstructor of my Quiet (said he) take the Reward of thy Villany in the Grave. Hardly was he fallen on the Deck, but his amazed Spirits returned, being ready to give a Farewe to the old Companion the Body; which Oras mus feeing, made ready to give him another Blow, fo to make a sudden End to that fatal Se paration, which Almerin perceiving cryed out Oh, hold your Hand! It is enough, I fee my Soul is ready to take her Flight, and my Continuance here will be but a few Moments

Oh beg

fear foll to

Hap

but last Mis

the

In

boister ing Ecto the listing for the listing f him wa trance with a mentation

Morm of the good th

e

d

n

r

y

n,

npt

(e,

to

re-

0-nce

ith

old

he

ere

ake

rd-

zed

we

raf

he

Se

ut

fee

m

nts

Oh horrible! Oh fearful! Oh terrible! Still beginning and never ending Eternity; now I defire to live because I fear to die; yet I would die because I would be free from the fear of worse to come. Oh happy they that so live, that they may be never asraid to die; to such Death is a Bed of Rest, Eternal Happiness, and their Reward is Elizium; but mine is—another Voyage, my last Minutes are at Hand, I go away in a Mist I know not how; I can no more, Farewel. At this Word he gave up the Ghost, to the Amazement of Orjamus, and the Terror of Cynthia.

In a Moment the Glory of the Day was overcast with black Clouds, the Winds grew boisterous, and the Seas turbulent, the resounding Eccho of the Thunder Claps were terrible to the Hearer; Flashes of Lightning made the Ship feem on Fire, with Storms of Hail and Rain, so that there began a cruel Tempest, the Waves grew proud; and the Ship disdain'd to be govern'd by the Pilot's Skill, so that the Men made towards Cynthia's Cabbin, to give Notice to their Captain to have his Advice: When behold they were amazed at the difmal Object presented unto their Eyes; they saw im wallowing in his own Blood at the Entance of the Cabbin, this Sight was followed with a loud and bitter Cry, and with the Lamentations of many different Voices; still the form continued, and their Confusion incread, until at last recollecting their Distractithey agreed with one Confent to make their Revenge upon Orasmus, who they doubted doubted not had been the Murtherer of their Captain; part they appointed to manage the Ship in that Stotm, while the rest went to sacrifice his Blood to the Ghost of their flain Commander; their Resolution was answerable to their Defign; for the Loss of their Captain. whom they loved fo entirely, and in whom they built their future Fortunes, had raifed their Choler to fuch a Height that nothing could allay it but his Death; this was made manifest in their fierce Assault, which was by Ora/mus as bravely repulsed, for he had gotten this Advantage, that defending himself at the Entrance of the Cabbin-Door, but one at a Time could endanger or hurt him; the Com bat continued hot on both Sides, Orasmus for the fafety of his dearest Cynthia, and the Py rates for their Revenge, three of the Pyrate Orasmus had sent to accompany their Captain neither did he himself escape without Wounds Things were thus stated when the Tempest be gan to affuage, and one from the Fore caftl began to cry out, A Sail, a Sail. This Summon persuaded them to defer their Revenge for fmall Time, fo that of that great Number tha affailed him, fix only staid as a Guard to secur him, fearing, should they engage, he might isse forth, and join with the knemy to their n fmall Disadvantage.

The Ship drew nearer, making towards the with full Sails, and before their Preparation were in a Readiness for Defence, they were shuted with Showers of Arrows that seemed darken the Sky; in a few Moments they can to a closer Combat, and grappled with the Ship; then the Fight became bloody and cru

Defp

Defi twice in t their treat that caped and S bin, Folly drew

thers

Man, yet he felf a Victor was a very f his M fometh

Gourag your 1 promise

You it flow not onl issance ship be ain lies nothing dvine I ng my hese T

en

he

fa-

m-

to

in,

om

fed

ing

ade

by

ten

the

it a

om

for

Py

ate

ain

ds

be

aftl

1011

or

tha cur

ffd

hei

tio

e f

1

an ·u

fp

Despair made the Pyrates couragious, so that twice they repulsed them with no small Loss; in the third Assault they were worsted, and their Enemies taking Advantage of their Rereat, flew all, leaving not a Man alive, those that guarded Orasmus were fled away, and esaped his Hands, but it was only to fall by others; some that were forwardest for Plunder and Spoil, would have entred Orasmus's Cabhin, but their Lives paid the Forfeit of their Folly; this occasion'd another bickering, and drew most part of the Conquerors together to behold a Refistance so bravely maintained by one Man, where eight lay wallowing in their Blood, yet he made good his Defence; thus he continued triumphing in their Deaths, making himfelf a Bravado of their Carcasses, while the Victorious Captain that had boarded the Ship was a Spectator, and pitying that so much Bravery should wither in the Bud, he commanded his Men to leave affailing him, and drawing lomething nearer, Gallant Man (faid he) your Courage has gained an Esteem in the Breast of your Enemy; cease this fatal Contest, and I promise your Safety of Life and Liberty.

Your offer is noble, reply'd Orlamus, nor could thow but from a Breast truly g nerous; it is not only against your Men I have made this Resistance, but against the whole Strength of the Ship before your Valour subdu'd it; the Captain lies here a Sacrifice, slain by my Hand; and nothing could have preserv'd my Life, had not twine Providence directed you hither; yet being my Preserver, I dare not deliver myself on the Terms; not that I doubt the Performance of your Promise, but a small Addition thereunto; here is within this Cabbin one whose Safety if I cannot fecure, I shall little value my own; if you please to let us both share alike in your Bounty, and promise to include us both in that noble offer of Life and Liberty, I'll submit myself to your Protection; if not, I am ready to make good my Defence with the Loss of that Life I shall not esteem, without the intire Performance of these Articles. this, he put himself in a Posture of Defence Hold, quoth the Captain, for Curiofity's Sake I'll fulfill all my Request; in the King of Kent' Name, my royal Master, I plight thee my Faith. Orasmus remained amazed at this Anfwer, and after some Revolutions in his Spirit (he replied) Ha, King of Kent, said you Come and finish what you have begun, for I'll never live to fee that in another's Cuffody, that is whole and intirely true to my Merit.

Scarce had these Words took a Farewe from his Mouth, but behold an aged old Man with more hafte than his many Years would permit him, made thro' the Crowd towards him and being come fomething nearer, that he might be heard, with an Extafy of Joy he at ter'd theie Words, (my noble Lord Orajuu living and found here! Heavens, you have fa tisfied my tedious Expectations) and paufing while with Admiration, he continued his Di courfe, Sir, I am not fo much lost unto you Memory, but you may remember one Willifred At this Orasmus recollecting himself, crying ou My dear Father, oh come into this fatal Place that I may have this happiness in death to die the Defence of two Persons that share my So

betwi

be tal on evi Ti pro ber

ceff

a nother than the effect May rant of the flair your ende

Tid

throwten y
I go
more
our o
of ye err'd
cial.

pest, the I ment sears so bei

you 1

Soul

re-

ofe

ny

in

oth

ubam

ofs

in-

ing

ce.

ake

nt

my

An

irit

ou

I'l tha

ewe Mar

ould

nim

t h

u suu e fa

ng Di

you

free

ou

lace

ie i

So

Wil

betwixt them. Oh Sir! replied the old Man talk not of Death, we came in search of you only for your Sasety, that I may make all this evident unto you, cease your Admiration for a Time. This said, and all continuing silent, he proceedeth as followeth:

Oswald, that famous King of the Northumbers, had a Brother named Ofwin, the only Succeffor to that great Kingdom; he was married to a noble Lady, by whom he had Issue Egfrid the Elder, and Orasmus one Year younger; so that you are not my Son, as hitherto you have esteemed yourself, when that fatal Battle of Masterfield was fought by King Penda, the Tyrant of Mercia, against your Uncle Oswald, King of the Northumbers, in which Field he was flain. It was then uncertain whether Ofwin your Father, or your elder Brother Egfrid had ended their Lives at that Moment; as foon as Tidings were brought of their dismal overthrow, I fled with you, being as then about ten years old, unto the next Port Town, where I got Shipping, and escaped away, to find a more fecure Sanctuary in another Country than our own, that I kept you from the Knowledge of yourself, your Pardon, it was my Love that err'd, for I did conclude it would be prejudicial. While we were failing on the Ocean, as you well remember, there arose a mighty tempest, that I imagined we escaped Death on the Land, to receive it from the liquid Element; the Storm encreased, and with it our lears; the skill of the mariners was used in vain, ho being left to the mercy of the Sea and Wind, we

we were convey'd unto unknown Parts; the Storm continued, fo that about the Dawning of the fecond Day we discerned Land, and before ever we had time to recollect upon that Shore we were cast, we grounded upon a Rock, so that the Ship bursted into a thousand pieces; the little time I had left I did confider of your fafety, to that tying two Casks together, and seeing you fafely on, I left you to the Mercy of the Sea, while I did provide for my own Security; I fecur'd me on a piece of timber that came from the broken Ship, but mine was driven a contrary Coarse unto that which you went, so that we soon separated a great Distance, so that I never faw you fince, until this moment. Sometime after your Father recover'd, and took poffession of his Brother's Kingdom, and after I had made a ftrie inquiry about them parts, where I conceived you were landed ashore, and not finding you, I imagined you had paid your Life as Tribute unto the unmerciful Waves: So that I returned home forrowfully into my own Country, and made this Relation unto your Father, who bitterly lamented your loss; but Time at last put your Memory into Oblivion, when we confidered you were not among the Living.

Some years had added themselves unto the age of Time, when Fame proclaim'd in our country the excellent beauty of Cynthia, daughter to the King of Kent; so much did the Report of this their unknown seize your brother Egfrid's Affections, as he desir'd his father to treat of an alliance with the King of Kent by a marriage with his daughter; his father that after the report of your death, did prize him as the apple of his eye.

unwilling

aft im bose a
ended
he Re
dmitte
am of mto tl sears

mvill

Sir, ny dea
he be,
ng, e'
m To

he plea er che ang o afant he wh Vallies Notes; pon the hwards hace w inther, hey en arted I outh a deavou

er wan

f, and

the

of

ore

we

the

ttle

10

ou

ea,

fe-

the

ary

we

ver

af-

of

e a

on

ing

s a

at 1

un-

er.

at

wd

age

itry

the

thi

Af

al

v.th

to

ye ing mvilling to cross his Affections in a Cause so of immediately accorded with his Desires, and hose me for that Emb2ssage; so that well attended, in a few Days I arrived at Doraborina, he Regal City of Kent; in a small Time I was dmitted to a Hearing, where I deliver'd the sum of my Embassage; hardly had I arrived not the Period of my Commands, but with sears in his Eyes he began as followeth:

Sir, some few Years ago, when I enjoyed my dearest Cynthia, for now she is not, or if be, she is not to me; in a pleasant Morng, e'er Sol had cast his Rays from the Mounin Tops, the arose to enjoy the Variety of he pleasant Spring, which Flora had cloth'd in er choicest Garb; the pearly Dew did yet ing on the fweet Damask Roses, and the hant Blossoms cast forth a pleasant Savour; he whild Choristers of the Wood made the allies ring with the Eccho of their delightful lotes; while her Contemplation was taken on the musing of these Rarities, her Curioly had brought her to a little Path which led wards the Sea, which was not far from the lace where she was; straying some small Way other, and cafting her Eyes on the Ocean, by encounter'd with an Object that at once arted her Admiration and Pity; she saw a outh about her Age, that had fecured himon two Casks, and with his utmost Skill deavour'd to gain the Shore; Remorfe is newanting in so tender a Breast, nor was it w absent from hers, she commanded those en that attended with all Expedition to make and fave his Life, and bring him unto her, having more timerous Apprehensions of his fafety than at that time needed; her Command were exactly obey'd, fo that by their Industr in a few Moments they fecur'd him fafe ashor and weak and feeble as he was, prefented his before Cynthia. I remember I was walking my Palace Garden when she presented him ut to me, after her Observations paid, ' Lo her Sir, faid the, taking the Youth by the Han with a Smile, sweetly innocent, see how for tunate I have been to day by my early rifing to be the Preserver of this pretty Lad, which with your Confent I would have to attend of me, fince it is his Defire to spend his Life, · fo happily preferv'd, in my Service.' Wi this fhe related where, and how he came un her Hands; I staid some time for an Answe contemplating his Behaviour, and fweet b coming Graces; methought I faw fomething him of Majesty. I questioned him of his Nar and Country, to which he gave me this A Good fwer: Sir, my Name is Orfamus, my Fath please. an aged old Man, which I fear perish'd in the late Storm; my Country is far hence, · Parts unknown to me; and being shipwreck in the late Tempest, he secured my Safety up lightful on two Casks; many Hours I continued the Waves, uncertain of Line, cast upon this happy Shore, and rescued from as, distance by this fair Divinity, as at rate whose Service I should be too happy, were affured of my dear Father's Safety.' At the Period of this Discourse he let fall a Shower Tears to the Memory of so near a Loss, we comforted him with the most agreeable Word heing

we C be L ther notic tisfied he ex he les

He

whole

had a comm he ha was n deed d his wh inan l him el his Of bispak and Pl tetire ! charm cellent

eward: eceived

Merits ; Adions

h

nd

til

r

vi

u er

m fo

in

hie

d

e,

Vi

un we

4

g

an

A ath

n t

e, eck y u

bs

IN fro

ty,

wer t

ís,

we could frame, telling him his Mistress would be to him instead of a Father; that if his Father were cast upon our Coast, he should have notice given of his Safety; he seemed much faisfied with this Discourse, which Contentment he expressed in his Countenance; for that time he left me and attended the Princes.

He was already become the Darling of the whole Court, every day added to his esteem he had already gotten, who all admired fuch uncommon Graces should bud in Years so green; he had a Solidity that overtop'd his Age; he was never hardly from Cynthia's Eye, nor inhed did she defire it, so that he seemed to bound is whole Felicity in her Service; he waited mm her Walks and Recreations, but still kept limself about her with a profound Reverence; is Officiousnels was such, that all his Actions bhake him; he would not prize the dearest Good before the least and smallest Occasion to please her; he courted all Opportunities, Times and Places, to make it manifest; if the would tetire herself into an Arbour, there would he charm sweet Sleep upon her Eye-lids with delightful Musick, in which Art he was very exclent; and while he flept he would remain a areful Centinel, the Princess, young as she was, did not bury those Services in Oblivion, at rated them at their true Value in her Breaft, warding all with a grand Effeem, which was mived by him as a Reward far exceeding his ver of Merits; he could so sweeten his Discourse and Adions to fo near a Sympathy, his Conversati-Worse heing so charming and agreeable, that Cynthia

qu

th

.

to

Re

the

for

hir

ed

Ch

the

hin

unt

the Hea

Gro

first

but Fig

yet incl

my, Batt

was.

flood

Blow

deen

the .

quel

was never fatisfied when he was absent; as his Years increas'd he bent his delight to manly Exercises, so that many times his gallant Deportment in Publick Specacles drew Admiration from all that did behold him, and e'er he attain'd his 15th Year he won the Prizes in all those Exercises wherein Valour or Wit were needful; fo that he became rarely skilled in every Undertaking, to which his virtuous Inclinations led him. Cynthia counted that Day happy wherein the found him, and my greatest Nobles became enamour'd of his Carriage, calling him the Fair Stranger; his Behaviour was fo free, fweet, generous and obliging, that there was not one that envied his Happiness; nor was it a small Hold he had gotten in my Esteem.

His Affairs flood thus in Court, when my Land was fuddenly invaded by Cavaline King o the West-Saxions; I raised an Army to oppose him, and fet forward to meet him; when thi young Novice, fired with hopes of Action to make Trial of his Valour, taking Opportunity when the Princess was alone, he accosted her is this manner: ' Madam, I am too happy in the · Felicity you have raifed me unto, in being your Servant. But now Opportunity pre · fents what perchance Fortune may never offe again; your Country is invaded by Enemie and I defire your good Leave to accompan · your Father in this Expedition against tho · Pagans that dare to commit fo great a Sacr · ledge, where in the Field of Honour I ma purchase some pretty Trophies that may rai me to deferve that Efteem you have for me Cinthia having a while confidered of his R

his

inly

De-

ati-

he

all

verd

in

ates

call

here

was

m

go

pol

thi

r ii

th

ein

pre

c ffe

nie

oan

ho

acr

ma

rail

me

quest, with an usual Kindness in her Eyes made this Reply: 'Yes, Orlamus, you have my free leave to go; nor can I trust you better than with my Father. Yet it is no small hopes I promise myself from these early Reginnings of your Bravery; go then and be happy, for you shall never want the Prayers of your Mistress.' This said, he attended her to my Chamber, where she made known his Resolutions unto me; nor could I disapprove the Gallantry of his Mind, but commending his forwardness, gave him my Consent, ordering him always to be near my Person; thus I parted with my dearest Cynthia, seaving her rosy Cheeks bedew'd with pearly Tears for fear of the Dangers I exposed myself unto.

We marched forward by unufual Journeys to hinder the Enemies foraging of the Country. until at last we encamped upon a large Plain, on the Frontiers of my Kingdom, called Black-Heath; here we took the Advantage of our Ground, and bad the Enemy Battle; it was first begun by the Fore-runners of our Armies, but at last our main Battle engaged, and the Fight became bloody on both Sides. Victory as yet remaining doubtful to which fide she would incline; at last by a violent Charge of the Enemy, my Ranks were broken, and my main Battle disorder'd, and in spight of my Guard I was taken Prisoner; this was no sooner underflood by Orsamus, but like a young Mars, he rushed into the midst of the Throng, dealing Blows with fo much Bravery, that he foon redeemed me, and in short we became Masters of the Field.

But

But it fortun'd foon after, I became the Disturber of his Quiet, and chief Occasion that he lest my Court. It sell out thus; the East-Angles King, my adjoining Neighbour, asked Conthia in Marriage, for his Son Cordello; my Council advised me to grant his Request; I condescended to their Advice, and concluded the Marriage with his Ambassador, telling them I would celebrate the Nuptials in Doroborina; the Ambassador returned home, and in a few Days after Cordello arrived with a great Train. The Day was appointed to join their Hands, all Necessaries provided, yet by a Turn of Fortune it came to no Effect.

After this Contract of Marriage, Orfamus became possessed with an unusual Melancholy; he fought out folitary Places wherein to fpend his Time, a mortal Sadness was charactered in all the Features of his Face, the whole Court concerned themselves in his Misfortunes, and my felf was not the leaft; I oftentimes demanded of him from whence this Change did arife, but he never yielded me any account. This was foon taken notice of by Cynthia, fo that being with him alone in the Garden Walks, taking Opportunity from those Heart breathing Sighs that brake from the Closet of his Breatt; How now, Orfamus, faid she, why these Sighs? Whefore is your Countenance changed? What have you let yourfelf fall into a Distemper below the Knowledge of your Miffress Reveal it, that if possible, I may procure a Remedy. Yes, faid Orfamus, it is only you can yield a Remedy; you made me happy only to be unfortunate; Oh that I had been buried in

the

the

plac

Dea

me,

it is

ed C

Rer

Per

Wit

hall

Ma

Life

for Zea

Ref

the

aga

or I

gai

und

I fa

tur

bit

call

ous

the

to.

bli

on

my

Ba

to flee

my

the

Di-

that

aft-

iked

; 1

the

m I

na :

few

ain

nds.

of

mus

ly;

end

in

urt

my ded

but

was

ng

ing hs

it;

efe

d?

ms ?

ean

to

in

e

the raging Ocean, I should have found a resting place in Elizum, and not have died by a second Death. Oh, Madam, continued he, refolve me, must you be married? Yes, reply'd Cynthia. it is so decreed: Than farewel Hopes, continued Orsamus, now Madam you have provided a Remedy, Death and Despair will soon give a Period to my Life; but because I will accord with your Defire, that your Displeasure may hasten on the Death I so much desire, know, Madam, from that Moment you preferve my Life, until this Time, I have nourish'd a Passion for your Virtues, accompanied with fuch a Zeal as will follow my Ashes to the Grave; my Resistance and Reason became too weak to turn the Current of it, altho' I levied all the Power against you that was likely to present any Fruit or Hope; I endeavoured to fortify my Soul against the Force of Nature with an Opposition, under which he was like to fall your Sacrifice. I faw my Refolutions cowardly turn their Heads in the Com- Hyemn's Part but against you; and though I 3 Page 253.

called all the Knowledge that I ought to have of you and myself, to reinforce them, at last I found an absolute Impossibility to hold up my Arms any longer. It was no blind Presumption that thrust me headlong upon this Attempt, for I never fee any thing in my Person or Services that might authorize ray Boldness; 'tis a restless Constraint that labours to excuse me. Seven long Years are past and fled away fince I have concealed this a Secret to. my Bosom; the Summers scorching Heat, nor the tedious Winter Nights could never work the least

least Clange; it was daily nourished by your Goodness, although innocently, until it came to its full growth; whilst there was the least Hope it thriv'd, nor did I ever complain; but to have Hope torn up by the Roots, to be confin'd never to see you more, is a Cruelty cannot be born. Here he continued filent.

9

I

H

7

F

0

T

I

So

TI

1

Whilft Cynthia remained aftenished at his Discourse, but at last recovering that Assurance the had left the time of his Discourse, ' How now, Orfamus? replied the it is thus you · pay your Respects unto me?, Dare you raite your Ambition to the Daughter of a King? or · could you imagine I would own your Pie enfions? I am forry my efteem fould be thus · lessened by your Polly; or if my Intentions or · Inclinations could lean that way, it is imposfible my Father should ever consent, whose · Displeasure I would not gain, to obtain the dearest Good; to put an End to those Dan-· gers that this may cocasion for the future, I defire you from henceforth to avoid my Prefence, fince there is only this Means left to cure your Malady, while I restrain those innocent Familiarities that have disturbed your · Quiet. Oh Madam ! quoth Orfamus, falling on his Knees, mitigate your Displeasure a little, the:e wanted only this to make me wretched It is deereed, reply'd Cynthia, with a Voice fomewhat elevated, and Eyes beginning to kindle with Arger and it behoves you not to dispute it' Saying this, she left them wi hout other Voice to speak, or Strength to sollow her; unto fo fad a Condition was he reduced: What his Complaint were after her Departure

I cannot tell, but certain I am, upon this Occasion he absented himself from Court, having first indited these Verles, and convey'd them into her Cabinet, which was not hard for him to do, considering that Access and Liberty was always allowed unto him. Some few Hours after his Departure they came to Cynthia's Hands, and I think they spake these Words:

Tho' cruel Cynthia, for one small amiss To rob me of my better Part of Blis. Ob cruel Life! That's never free from Fear, Preserv'd by Pity, ruin'd by Despair. I Love, and therefore from your Sight I go, Who can behold you, and not love you too? 'Tis all Mens Faults but my too wretched Fate Makes only me the Object of your Hate. Hofe your Prefince by too much Respect, Others enjoy it only by Neglect. Ob dismal Grief that harbours in my Breast, My absent Joys hegets me this . Unrest. He that enjoys a Bliss, enjoys a Cross, That makes him treble wretched in the Loss. When Phoebus to our Sight doth disappear, The Night seems darker cause it once was bere. Your Doom is past, I'll not dispute it now, But to your Sentence with Submission bow. Farewell my dearest Mistress, stubboon Heart, Oh break when I pronounce this word (depart) Adteu my chiefest Good; Oh let that Breath That bids adjey, give entrance to my Depth. I talk of going, yet I flowly move, So weak does Reason to a lover prove. This Dulness only speaks the want of Wit, I wish you bappy, yet would hinder it. Lujay your ame leaf

bu connnot

his ance low

you aile

en-

ns or pof-

the Dan-

, I Pre-

inour

ing lit-

cha

ing not

how

d: re nInjoy your Wishes then, while wretched I Seek out an unfrequented Place to die; So in my Death your Pity I may have To make my Ghost rest quiet in the Grave.

ORSAMUS.

6

re

m

m

bi

hi

hi

ar

hi

fh

P

The Sight of these Lines, and the Absence of Orsamus, produced great Effect in the Breast of Cynthia; Discontent sealed itself on her Brow, the Carnations of her Cheeks began to abate, and the Lillies began to possess their Places, having demanded the Reason of these fudden Effects, she made me a Discourse of all the particulars that had fallen out betwixt Orfamus and herself, and the Occasion of his Absence; also shewing me these Verses I have rehearfed unto you. Look here, Sir, faid she, fee the Resolution of this Unfortunate, occassoned by one hasty Word, which I fear will destroy what I so happily preserv'd; altho' the audacious revealing of his Love were an Offence, it was not of that degree to call his Life in question. Shall I tell you from whom I do not conceal my closest Secrets; had Orsamus's Love been authorized by your free · Confent, I would have chosen him out of the Stock of Mankind; nor can I much of-· fend in loving one that has been the Preserver of your Life and Kingdom.' I could not much gainfay what she had faid, for Or famus's Virtues were fo well grounded in my Breast that oftentimes I have had some thoughts myself to his Advantage, tending that Way; but as things were now stated, I durst not make my Concerns known

e

r

O

r

e

II

t

e

rel

known unto Cynthia, lest they might occasion fome demur. The Marriage-Day drew near at Hand, and Cordello waited the Confirmation of his Nuptials, fo that I could not go back from my Promise without provoking the East-Angles King to be my Enemy. This Confideration caused me to cloud my Countenance with a Frown: 'Fie, Cynthia, replied I, forget this: Man, one of fo mean and low Condition; were his Birth any ways correspondent to thine, I think I should have accorded with thy Defires, had I known it before this Contract with Cordello; but this has proceeded fofar, that the deferring of it would endanger my whole Kingdom. Banish this miserable ' Man from thy Memory, and obey the Commands imposed on thee by thy Father and a "King.' She made no Reply, but with a low Submission seemed to consent with what I desired, and so left me, the Conduits of her Eyes being ready to overflow their Banks. After her Departure I fent secret Spies thro' all Parts of my Kingdom to fearch for Orlamus, with Commands if they found him to bring him back again; my Discontents came little short of Cyuthia's for his Departure, for I could not so soonbury in Oblivion the Memory of fo brave a Man, to whose Valour I was so much obliged: his absence wrought Effects upon my Soul, and his Merits had gotten fuch fure footing in my Breast, that had not this fatal Marriage been an Obstruction, I would have offered that into his Arms he fo much defired, and I doubt not L should have found a clearer Satisfaction in his Person, than in the Possession of Royalties. For

For true Nobility was never begun but by Virtue: Nor is it as the vulgar Opinion of Men rate it, but it is only the Praise and Sirname of Virtue: It is a miserable Folly to be Esteem of dead Men when we deserve none ourselves; for the true Honour and Worship, saith a wife Man, is the Virtue of the Mind, which Honour no Monarch can give thee, nor no Flattery or Money can purchase us.

Princes should be Patterns of Virtue to them over whom they Rule, for most People take their Rulers as a Glass to examine themselves by; so let the Prince be Vicious, the People shall not be Virtuous over whom he Rules: for they think they cannot do better, than to regulate their Actions by their Princes; this Consideration should be of Force enough to induce Princes so to live, that their Virtuous Actions may shine in the Eyes of their Subjects; that they should nourish budding Virtue, and protect it in a Cottage as well as in a Palace, for the Diamond is of as much Value worn by a poor Man, as upon the Finger of the Rich.

I have the more enlarged myself on this Subject, continued he, because I apprehend my Neglect in rewarding Virtue occasioned these Missortunes that suddenly befel me. But to my Discourse again. My Spirits returned Home again without bringing the least Intelligence of Orsamus's Abode; this being revealed unto Cynthia, added much unto her Grief; as Orsamus before had done, she sought out Solitude, she refrained Company, but when Decency required it, she shun'd all Divertisements that might charm her Melancholly, so that she

77

r-

g

B

d,

or

m

ce.

es

Te

or

e-

n-

ce

ns at

0-

or

2

b-

y

0

d

1-

1-

.

3

t

e

the brought herself wholly to an Estate of Pity and Compassion; I beheld this Vicissitude with a mortal Vexation, and gladly would have procured a Remedy.

Time flew away with exceeding Swiftness. and the Sun had but one Career to run before the Day of Marriage approved; and being unwilling at fuch a Time the should be a desperate Thing wholly made up of Sorrow, I caused a stately Banquet to be prepared in a Garden I had abutting to the Sea-side, environed by an unfrequented Wood, fo fituated that Nature and Art both endeavoured to make it a Nonparil, it was here I recreated my felf when my Business at Court would permit my Absence; it was illustrated with many spacious Houses of Pleasure, adorned with Flora's fairest Treafury, whereunto frequented a melodious Confort of the wild Choristers of the neighbouring Woods. Variety of Objects will dislipate the deepest Sadness, but it produced no Effects in the Soul of Cynthia, for thither I came with her attended by Cordello, who accompany'd us with a great Train. Our Banquet was ended. and the Sun began to decline towards the weftern World, when we all betook ourselves each to those Pleasures the Mind best affected; Cordello remained with me, and Cynthia, accompanied only with her usual Attendance. directed her Walk to that part of the Garden abutting to the Sea; she hardly approached unto the utmost Bounds of the Garden, but the gave a Caution to her Servants to keep at a distance; these Commands were common with with her when she desired to retire herself from Company, scarce, by the Turnings of some Alleys, had fhe concealed herfelf from their Sight, but by a small Passage, that gave an Entrance into the Wood, she gave an Exit to the Garden, where she stayed about an Hour before her Attendance would break the Bounds of those Commands she had imposed on them; at last the Care of her Safety had Precedency before their Breach of Duty, and they followed the same Path they saw her take, but they could not find what they fought; by the Passage that they found open they all agreed that she had willingly strayed in the Woods; they once resolved to follow her, but better Reafon diffuaded them the Turnings were fo intricate, that being once entered it is possible they might fooner lose themselves, than recover their absent Mistress; these second Thoughts directed them to give me Notice of her Departure; this News feized my Soul like a Thunder-clap, still things became worse and worse; each Particular foreshewing an unhappy Augury to ensue; nor did my Apprehenfions fail me, for that I was afraid of foon came unto me, and the Thing which I did dread came upom me like a Tempest; upon these Tidings in a Moment we dispersed ourselves into all Parts of the Wood, promised great Rewards to him that could bring me the first Tidings of her Safety; scarce a Thicket in the Wood was left untrac'd, and as far as we could conceive all our Labours would become fruitless, when it was Cordello's Hap to find her fitting alone. He made towards her, and

C

W

fe

H

th

do

ha

ftr

for

at

mu

ag

for hac

lyi

tha

one

fo .

Sen

and feating himself by her Side, hardly had any Discourse passed between them, but there iffued out of the adjacent Wood a Man that bent his Steps toward the Water-fide, but feeing her fit there, altered the Course of his Defign; he cast himself at her Feet, and was soon known to be the absent Orsamus; after many Complaints that she was Cruel, seasoned with so many Tears as would have produced Pity in a Barbarian's Heart, his Carriage and Actions fo desperately amazed Cynthia, that fhe had not courage enough for a Reply; at last he resolved, in a desperate Manner to sacrifice the last Part of his Life to his Love; he drew his Sword, the Sight and Fear of which cast Cynthia into a deadly Trance; he had made that Part the Tragick Scene of his Revenge on Cordello, if his Attendant had not fortunately made in and rescued him from his Hands, and all at once affaulted him; Five had their Passports for the other World, and no doubt the Company that continually increased had put a Period to his Life, had not a strange Turn of Fortune preserved him. From forth a small Creek issued out Sixteen Pyrates, at the Sight of which he that affaulted Orafmus fled away, but he made good his Defence against them. Too late I had News of this, for I made to the Place with what Power I had, but I faw nothing but half a Score Men lying dead on the Ground. Amongst those that lay wallowing in their Gore, there was one that began to recover a little, and was so well followed by my Servants, that his Senses returned unto him. I promised him his

1 2 1

ets

his Life, on Condition he would give me a true Relation what they were. After a Sigh he began as followeth:

My Country is Norway, and the Commander of these Men, with whom I came ashore, is Almerin, the famous Rover of these northern Parts, and his Protector is a King of Nowway; I believe the Name of · Almerin is not unknown to the Inhabitants of · Albien, but his Robberies keep it always green in Memory, under his Conduct fixteen of us came ashore, and were bravely repulsed by one fingle Man, who made his Defence good against us all, for the preserving a Lady that lay Senseles on the Ground: · Three of my Companions besides my self lay grovelling in their Blood at his Feet, which Sight incenfed Almerin to a speedy Revenge, that they rushed upon him in all 6 Parts with such Rage and Force, that it · feemed impossible he should make any longer · Refistance; in fine, they feized him, and convey'd both him and the Lady aboard our Vessel. This is all the Account I can give you; for your Pardon of my Life it is of no Value, fince my Pass is figned for the 6 other World; Kings may take Life away, but they cannot command a Soul to flay when her Care is expired; fuch is mine. Oh King, continued he, you cannot give what you dare not promise your self; I am going the Way of all Mortals, in Death there is ono Difference; my Soul is ready to take her last Adieu: Oh let my Death be a Glass to · thew

h

CC

A

Si

Ca

Co

e

-9

nne

of

2

of

of

ys

en

re-

nis

-15

nd:

elf

et,

dy

all

it

ger

and

ard

can

is

the

ay,

hen Oh

hat

ing

e is her

s to

new

fhew what I was, and what you must shortly be!' Saying this, Life gave an Exit indeed, and left his Body breathless on the Groond, Scarce had I unfix'd my Eyes from this Object of Mortality, and cast them towards the Ocean, but behold I faw the Ship that contained all my wordly Joys going before the Wind with full Sails, wasting away my Soul; how often did I with some Remora would obftruct its Flight? But my Prayers and Sighs were turned to Air, from whence they were framed, and produced no Effects; I gave Commands to several Vessels to follow this Pyrate, but all Things agreed to further his E cape. The Night became exceeding dark, and there arofe a mighty Storm, fo that he was conveyed to unknown Parts, far from my Country. This Sir, is one Reason I cannot accord with your Master's Defires; and the other is, where she here, I could not without breach of Honour break my Promise to Cordello; although shall I tell you, I hold him not fit to enjoy such a Treasure, because he had not Reason to prize the Worth of what he would poffess; these be the Causes that inforce me not to agree with his Request, whose Alliance should otherways court, being far above my Hopes-

Here, Sir, continued Willifrid, the King ended his Story, which I hearkened unto with Affonishment; at last recollecting my Spirits, Sir, replied I. your Discourse gives me great Cause of Wonder and Pity; and perhaps my Concernments in your disastrous Story will not vail or become inferior to your Resentments, I pity poor Orsamus's Misfortunes; but before I proceed, tell me one Thing truly, I fee you prize Orsamus's Virtues as their full Value, should his Birth be as illustrious or more sublime than his Virtues, would you deny him your Daughter in Marriage. 'Would I, (replied the King, expecting the Period of my Difcourse) Could I expect Heaven would be so fortunate unto me, his Person and Merits, without Addition of Honours, should gain ' Precedency in my Breaft before all Men.' I was much fatisfied at the Freeness of his Difcourse, and returned to him this Answer: Know Sir, Or famus is of Royal Blood, second Son to my Master, the mighty King of Northumbers, by Cafualty shipwrack'd on our Coast; I gave him a Relation of what already you have heard, which augmented his Admiration and Satisfac-This Discourse was about three Days after your Departure from the Kentish Coast, I comforted him in what measure I might, telling him I would return to my Master, to give him this Intelligence of those many strange Adventures, from whence I would fet out with a Ship well mann'd in pursuit of the Pyrate, and that if I mis'd of him I would go unto the King of Norway, and demand them of him, and if he refused their Delivery, to arm most of the Kingdom of Albion in his behalf that had been disadvantaged by his Robberies; he seemed much fatisfied with what I had proposed, not making any demur against any thing I had delivered; for that time we brake of our Discourse and began to fall to Action; he bestowed many r.ch

W

M

th

for

Ag

no!

ting

thu

one

the

awa

Tin

your

rich Presents on me, fitted out this Ship we are now in; for my better Accommodation in my Passage dispatch'd this noble Commander as his Ambassador, with full Power to confirm whatever we had, or for the future should agree upon for the Recovery of you and his Daughter, the Wind blowing fair we put off from Shore, ard gave a Farewel to the King. In fine, we had a nimble Passage into our own Country, where I landed, and gave your Father an Account of your Safety, and what else seem'd satisfactory to your Discovery; your Father rejoiced much at the Tidings of your Safety, according with the King of Kent in all his Requests, for they were equally concerned in each others Difasters.

Hardly were Commands issued out for a preparation, but a Ship that came into our Harbour brought News that Almerin was off at Sea, and that they narrowly escaped his Hands; this Opportunity would admit of no Delays, which this brave Captain conceiving requested the Command of the Ship we are now in; in a Moment it was strongly mann'd with our own Men, who freely offered their Lives to redeem their Prince, with their chearful Acclamations foretelling a prosperous Omen; myself, though Age would have excused it, accompanied this noble Man; the though of your Welfare extinguishing the Imagination of my own Danger, thus we made off to Sea, accompanied with one Ship more which was fevered from us in the late Storm. Four Days had not yet passed away fince I left our own Country, in which Time Heaven had been so kind to make me

0-

I

g

m n-

ip

of

he

een

ned

not de-

urse

any r.ch your Preserver, now what rests there behind. but that we return to your Father and Brother.

This Discourse being over, nothing else offered, Orsamus and Cynthia lest the Cabbin. whose Beauty was the Admiration of all that did behold her, and clamed Obedience, as Tribute from all Hearts; and the Respect there shewed her was not inferior to those she received in her Father's Court; the Captain fell at her Feet, paying his dutious Observance to his Princefs; they consulted with him and Willifred what course they should shape for the future; at last it was refolv'd to steer their way towards the Kingdom of Northumberland, and it was foon put into Execution; the Ships were cleanfed of the dead Carcaffes; Almerin's Body with the rest, was committed unto the Waver, and this was the miferable End of that wretched Man.

Neptune grew pliant, and Auftur with a pleafant Gale did fweetly swell their canvas Wings, that they feemed to fly; with fuch Swiftness did this happy Bottom speed them away, so that in less time than they expected they discovered their own Coast, where being arrived, they made themselves known unto the King, who was almost ravished with Joy in the Sight of his long loft Son; his Brother careffed him, his Friends welcomed him, nor could there be a Parallel to his Entertainment; the Relation of which I abbreviate, and remain filent: Words are not full enough to express their Content, for Language is too narrow to cloath great Passions. I shall only give the Reader this Caution, that there was nothing wanting to ex-

prefs

he

pa

cei

Ail

he)

Tits,

press their Joy more intire. Cynthia had such Respects paid her as were peculiar to so rare a Creature; fuch deep Impressions can Virtue and Beauty make on an Illustrious and High born Spirits; because they would not disturb their Happiness by a sudden sourney, they fent a Messenger express to the King of Kent, to certify him of his Daughter's Safety, to give him Advice, that in a few Days time Ofwin would be with him in Doroborina, accompanied with his two Sons, and his fair Daughter Cynthia, to celebrate Orsamus's Nuptials; the Messenger was received with all Joy and Respect, Preparations were made on all Parts for a triumphant Entrance: At the Time limited Ofwin came, and was received with all Acclamations of Joy, the Bells cast their resounding Eccho on all Parts of the City, and the Bonfires seemed to contest for Splendor, with the Planet that rules the Night; the Spectators were numberless that came to behold their loft Princess, and their Welcomes made a thundering Noise on all Parts; never was an Entry made into that City more stately. Thus they were attended to the Palace, where Cynthia cast herself at her Father's Feet, was raifed by the old King with excessive Ravishment; the Embraces and Kisses he bestowed on her were many, nor did they pass uncompanied without some Tears of Joy.

d

15

·e

Y

.

2-

ZS,

efs

fo

lif-

ed,

ng,

ght

im,

be

ion

nt:

Con-

reat

this

ex-

prefs

The Endearments being pass'd, he embraced the Northumbert King, who stood ready to receive him; then Egfrid, and lastly Orsamus, still calling him his Preserver. Orsamus (said he) now the time is come to reward your Merits, with what is most dear and precious unto

me,

me, for indeed all other Recompences were inferior to your Deferts.

What shall I say, the Salutations on all Parts were numberless, and the Welcomes infinite, while Supper lasted, which ended, and their high Flood of Joy being somewhat dissipated, they resolved about Orsamus's Marriage, whose Happiness was deferred no longer than till the next Day, which soon arrived, Phæbus hastening his Race with his swiftest Speed, unwilling his Absence should defer their Delights, or perhaps longing to behold the Royalties of so glorious a Day.

Cynthia was attired that Day in a Gown refembling the Colour of the Azure Sky, more fair than the Divinity that ravished Endymon; her Head was adorned with Jewels, which cast a Lustre on all Parts where she went; yet was that Splendor darkn'd by the transcendent Rays that pierced from her Eyes, than which nothing was more penetrating; she was the only Object of all those Eyes that beheld her that Day, and happy did he count himself that could gain a sight of this surpassing Beauty; for nothing was wanting to make that amiable, which, alas, was too lovely of itself.

Now the Hour approached when Hymen must do his Duty in knitting this happy Knot. Orsamus, with his beloved Cynthia, accompanied with the two Kings and Prince, attended by the Nobility of both Kingdoms, follow'd by an infinite Number of Spectators; after some small time had passed away, they arrived at the great Temple of the City, where the Bishop stood ready to join their Hands, which Ceremony performed

of

rec

fo t

formed with great Magnificence, they returned to the Palace. It would ask too long a time to describe the Entertainment they received homewards; many stately Pageans were erected, where the Gods and Goddesses seem'd to descend, and in Heroick Poems to describe their strange Adventures: Many rich Presents were offered by the Citizens, wherein they did express the Gratefulness of their Hearts. In fine, nothing was lest undone that could speak of their Joy more absolute; the Residue of that Day was spent in Masks and Plays, in all the Delights and Merriments the Heart of Man could fancy.

Phæbus necessitated, gave a Farewel to this upper World, yet not before he had charged his Sifter Cynthia to attend at Cynthia's Nuptials. which she duly performed; for never was there feen a fairer Night, where the heavenly Spangles were evident to the Eye, while Diana ran her Career in Glory, perhaps to vie Splendor with Cynthia, whose happiness she began to envy. The Time drew on when Morpheus with his Mace approaches, commanding the Rest; upon which Notice given, Cynthia was conducted by her Attendance to her Bed, af er whom followed Or famus, accompanied by the two Kings who faw him lodged by her fide; and giving them the Good-night, not without the Blushes of Cynthia, left them unto their Rest, er to the Possession of those Pleasures the Stock of Mankind might envy him; and here I would rest and continue silent, but that my Genius directs me a little farther, to give you notice, that fo true an Affection might be compleat, Heaven

st

he

n-

all

er-

ed

was pleased to bestow on their first Year a Son, and on the second a Daughter, which heir'd all the Perfection and Feature of her Mother. Orfamus and Cynthia loving and living in such Felicity and true Affection, as every Day seemed their Marriage Day, and every Night a fresh Rivalry of Delight, Cynthia living in Orfamus, and Orfamus bounding his whole Felicity in Cynthia.

After a Storm the Sun more bright appears;
That Joy is greatest that is rais d from Fears, And built on hopes doth chiefest Comfort bring,
A cruel Winter makes a lovely Spring; Adversity makes Men esteem of Wealth;
He that hath Sickness had doth prize his Health.
The Scene of Woe adds Pleasure to the Joys, Still to be happy Happiness destroys.
Excess of Dainties soon will glut the Taste, Felicity were Sorrow should it last.
Things that are dearest bought we most do prize,
And Joys kept down by Sorrows highest rise;
This is the Comfort most true Lovers sind, Their Hell is sirst, their Heaven is behind.

FINIS.